Country Hits
1944-1968

BROADCAST MUSIC, INC.

Broadcast Music, Inc.

AMONG THE EARLIEST agreements BMI made to act as custodian of performing rights were those with writers and publishers of country music. Before 1940, the first year of BMI's existence, most country music, its writers and publishers, had been barred from the national music establishment. As a result, although regional areas of the United States knew and loved country music, most Americans were unaware that such a meaningful form of our music existed and flourished.

■ Much of this was changed during the years of World War II, as our people moved back and forth across the land. They brought their music with them and, in turn, heard the music of other regions. Many Americans first came into contact with country music because of these population shifts. BMI's concern for and dedication to the economic rights of writers and publishers was an equally significant factor in the democratization of American music. The competition and economic opportunity provided by BMI led to national and then international recognition and approval of the writers, publishers and performers of country music. We are proud that as early as the 1950's our role was affirmed by the then Governor of Tennessee, the Honorable Frank G. Clement, who said in part:

"That competition has at last entered the music industry—and through this competition a greater opportunity for country music—is due in no small part to an organization called Broadcast Music, Inc., more generally known as BMI. This organization was created in 1940 to fight monopoly and to create competition. We who are so vitally interested in the health and well-being of all persons connected with country music are therefore indebted to BMI and to the opportunity it has brought about."

■ The following pages list those BMI-licensed country music songs, together with the names of their writers and publishers affiliated with BMI, which have gained national acceptance as measured by consistent appearance in the music business trade press. We begin at the year 1944 because it was only in that year that meaningful trade paper charts were first devoted to juke box play, record and sheet music sales and broadcaster use of country music. The listings from 1944 to 1966 reflect those charts.

■ In the year 1967, BMI first applied the measurement of broadcast use, reflected in radio station logs reported to us, to the selection of songs, writers and publishers to be honored with BMI Citations of Achievement for popularity in the country music field. The songs listed for the years 1967 and 1968 have been selected solely on that basis.
