MUSIC RETAILERS PREP FOR A NEW MILLENN

Stores Will Survive, But In A New Form

BY DON JEFFREY and ED CHRISTMAN

NEW YORK-Technology is the word on the tongues of all retailers and distribution executives. When they consider the retail store of the next millennium, they have to address the myriad ways in which technological developments will change the way they do business.

Jim Litwak, executive VP of merchandising and marketing for Albany, N.Y.-based Trans World Entertainment, says, "The biggest challenge is how we incorporate the technological advances seen in the last few years into the shopping experience of the future."

Retailers and majorlabel distribution executives interviewed for this article view the Internet and other new media as just that—a challenge-and not a threat. They agree that the record store will be around for a long time to come, but it will not look or sound the way it does now. Richard Cottrell, president of

Mercury's Richey Not Country-Bound

BY JIM BESSMAN

Having made two critically acclaimed but commercially unsuccessful country albums for Mercury Records Nashville, and finding herself without management when it came time to start her third album, Kim Richey says she was ready to retreat from Nashville to her hometown of Bellingham, Wash., to work in a friend's restaurant.

"I was bummed out and disappointed," says Richey, who lives in Franklin, Tenn. "I didn't even have a manager. But Luke [Lewis, Mercury Nashville pres-

LOS ANGELES-As its recently restructured R&B music department puts its muscle behind Eric Benét and other upcoming acts such as Terry Dexter, Warner Bros. Records further underscores its re-

All four deals are nonexclusive but give Warner Bros. the first right on any acts picked up by the principals, all of whom report to both Warner Bros. Records Inc. president Phil Quartararo and VP of A&R,

EMI's Bandier Enjoys Year Of Bests

Publishing Unit Sees Record Revenue, ASCAP And BMI Awards

BY IRV LICHTMAN

NEW YORK-If the word "best" frequently finds its way into observations uttered these days by Martin Bandier, the worldwide chairman/CEO of EMI Music Publishing, there's lots to quantify it.

Apart from his own company's wellbeing, Bandier envisions the Internet creating a robust new climate for music exposure and sales for the industry as a whole. "The Internet is as dramatic a development as the advent of TV," he says.

EMI Music Publishing has just broken out its full-year financial results for the first time (Billboard, June 5), and it's the company's strongest showing in its history in terms of revenue ($522 million). For the year that ended March 31, EMI Music Publishing produced 13.3% of revenue and 32.4% of operating profit for its parent, the EMI Group, of which Bandier is a board member.

Though operating profit slipped 2.1% from the prior year, Bandier says this result stemmed largely from dollars that went into "preparing us for the 21st century We made major investments in Latin America and Southeast Asia and in Internet services.'

The company also just walked away with top honors in pop (shared with Warner/Chappell Music) and country music at the recent ASCAP Pop Music Awards and can claim similar success at BMI's 1999 Pop Awards dinner. "And, for the ninth year in a row, we've topped ASCAP's [Rhythm And Soul Awards]," Randier says.

And so the feast of "bests" begins to flow from Bandier. "After 30 years in the music industry, it's the best time of my career," he says. "We've had the best year ever at EMI Music Publishing both on an economic and creative point of view. At the R&B awards, I found myself almost embarrassed to get up there and receive the awards. Then I realized, this just didn't happen by accident."

As for the annual figures that put a financial face on EMI Music Publishing, Bandier explains why the decision was made to break precedent among major publishers worldwide and report specific publishing figures.

"The EMI Music Group thought that as an integral part of the EMI Group structure, it wouldn't totally reflect full disclosure if we didn't put forth EMI Publishing's numbers. I was a bit hesitant at first, but at the end of the day I agreed with that."

On the matter of the acquisition of the U.S. music publishing interests of Japan's Fujisankei Communications—said to have boiled down to a three-way competition among EMI, Warner/Chappell, and Sony/ATV—Bandier says it isn't likely that EMI would settle only for Fujisankei's U.S. unit, Windswept Pacific, at a price said to be in the $200 million range

He indicates, however, that EMI Music Publishing would be interested in buying the U.S. company together with having at least joint-venture equity in Fujisankei's local publishing company.

Barring that piece of the local action, Bandier says, his company would have to reduce its offer for the U.S. unit.

If the present status of EMI Music Publishing has its "bests," Bandier says, there is in his view a best-of-times scenario ahead for the publishing communitv as a whole.

"We're preparing ourselves for the Internet and E-commerce," he says. "There is a revolution coming, and we're going to see growth as never before."

Bandier says that EMI songs are already being used on the Internet for, among other products, musical greeting cards. "It's an explosion," he says.

"What the Internet can do for publishing is boundless," he continues. For instance, he notes, "a film producer looking for music can, from the comfort of his home, hear songs and obtain suggestions for the proper mood, tempo, or feeling he is looking for.'

To provide this and other tools, EMI Music Publishing has a Web site search engine that covers 250,000 titles. "The Internet is, in fact, like TV without the mute button," he says. "There'll be music all over the place."

Because the Internet is a "whole new medium," Bandier suggests that publishers are not covered by any previous agreements in terms of performance and mechanical royalty rights collections.

"People like [U.S. mechanical collection agency] Harry Fox and [performance right groups] ASCAP and BMI do a great job, but it should be understood that publishers can do that, too," he says. "Tracking is now easier because of [developments] like watermarking."

Technological developments aside, Bandier is not about to dismiss the bricksand-mortar retail world or the importance of live appearances by performers. "People still like the idea of [visiting] retailers to socialize, to meet, to see and hear. And Bruce Springsteen and Billy Joel were not developed in one day. I'm always heartened to see my 10-year-old son using the Internet and listening to radio at the same time."

Though Bandier's corporate credentials are obvious, he says he does "worry that the business can get too corporate. It can sometimes erroneously believe that if $20 million was earned by the release of 20 albums, then it stands to reason that $40 million can be made by the release of 40 albums.

"We have to make sure that what we put out there has a sense of quality and freshness," he says.

RIAA To Cooperate With U.S. Probe Of Entertainment Biz Marketing Tactics

BY BILL HOLLAND

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Despite a vitriolic reaction to President Clinton's June 1 announcement of a federal probe into the entertainment industry's marketing practices, the Recording Industry Assn. of America (RIAA) says it will cooperate with the government.

The president has asked the Justice Department and the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) to probe the marketing of violent content in movies, music, and video games that are aimed at children (Billboard*Bulletin*, June 2).

Pam Horovitz, president of the National Assn. of Recording Merchandisers, says that the retail group will also encourage its members to cooperate with the investigation. But she adds, "We don't believe that retailers market product with violent content to children."

Representatives of the five major U.S. record companies either had no comment or directed questions about the probe to the RIAA.

The investigation will encompass the five major record companies, the seven major Hollywood studios, and the major video game manufacturers. According to Hilary Rosen, president/CEO of the RIAA, the probe could extend to "marketing companies and advertising agencies and publicity firms and retailers. There are a lot of places to go here."

Rosen responded angrily to the announcement of the probe in a prepared statement released June 1 in which she said that U.S. record companies "will continue playing a leadership role in the countless initiatives that provide real help to children and families to tackle violence and other critical issues, while the president apparently looks for headlines."

In a June 2 interview with Billboard, Rosen stood behind her comment. "What the White House did for a one-day headline was to bog our industry down with a year's worth of hassle," she says.

She says that "the music industry does not market violence to children. We market artists. And I think there's a big dif-

The probe is expected to take 18 months. According to the president's directive, it will investigate "whether and how the video game, motion picture, and recording industries market to children violent and other material rated for adults."

FTC chairman Robert Pitofsky said the agency will have subpoena power to examine internal marketing documents and records, much as it did in the "Joe Camel" investigation of tobacco companies.

Pitofsky, who was on hand at the announcement along with First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton and Attorney General Janet Reno, says that his agency wanted to look at the entertainment industry practices separately because of the inplace voluntary ratings systems.

While the results of the probe won't initiate criminal prosecutions, "the methods they are using will be similar," Rosen says. "They will use subpoena threats and the power of the FTC to look at what they want to look at."

The federal budget for the investigation is $1 million.

"God knows what we're going to have to spend," says Rosen.

Observers say Clinton "borrowed" the idea of an entertainment industry probe from the Omnibus Violence in Culture and (Continued on page 89)

Times A-Changin'? Best To Embrace Them

BY GARY ARNOLD

In the 1940s, when television was in its infancy, radio loyalists waged a war against change. In the 1970s, when the VCR was first unveiled, soothsayers warned it would be the death of the film industry

In both cases, they were wrong.

As we approach a new millennium, we are once again facing a monumental change in our industry. This time it is digital technology that is being branded the villain, and rarely a day goes by without reading about the potentially "harmful" effects on the music industry as we know

It is a fact that more technological advances will occur in our lifetime than in the sum total of all previous generations. And, as with any change, there are those who fear it and look to control the pace at which change occurs; and there are those who embrace it and foster the opportunities that surround change.

Best Buy counts itself among those who embrace change. We believe that technology will expand the size of the entertainment business by reinvigorating consumers' interest in music.

Technology has become an important marketing tool to an industry that has lost its ability to compete with the marketing strategies of existing and emerging competitive industries.

The "old deal" as we know it between the artist and record company is about to be over. Artists will have direct access to fans and access to technology. The cry of "give me back my masters" is soon to become the battle cry from artists who want to have more ownership in the success of their careers and to maximize revenue streams.

Consolidation at distribution will foster the pace at which artists move to create a new paradigm. At first these experiments will meet with skepticism, but be clear-success will come, and more and (Continued on page 44)

Retail Awaiting Download Payoff

LOS ANGELES—While the music industry is eager to realize the potential gold mine of digital distribution, some online retailers that offer the feature say they have yet to hit the mother lode.

"People see all the free stuff and hear about the exorbitant number of files being passed around, but when they have to pay for it, it's a different story," says Tower Records VP of worldwide marketing Mike Farrace.

Tower's Web site offers digital downloads of singles for 99 cents each, but Farrace says sales are insignificant. "We're selling so few downloads that at this point it's really a tempest in a teapot," he says.

On the other hand, some online dealers are counting on digital downloads to lead the way for a new wave of music retailing.

On June 2, CDuctive.com opened an Internet store offering 500 licensed tracks from 100 different labels for digital download in the MP3 format. Each of the singles is priced at $1.49. Offerings include cuts from Built To Spill, the Donnas, Goldie, and DJ Spooky, as well as material from artists on a number of indie labels, including Kill Rock Stars, Asphodel, Daemon, and Flydaddy

Additionally, the site runs a monthly promotion that offers free licensed downloadable singles. This month's offerings are from Eminem, Sleater-Kinney, and Aril Brikha.

"Our view is that until recently there has not been a lot of great music available in a legal MP3 for-

Ryan. "There has been a lot available for free but not enough good content available to have a buying pattern begin, and we have the strongest indie-label offering."

CDuctive has alliances with more than 250 dance, electronic, hip-hop, and indie-rock labels; Ryan says the site will expand its offering to "thousands" of tracks within the next few months. Three tracks representing a different genre will be available for free each month.

The company will also link its material with 40 online partners, including CDnow, Rolling Stone, Tunes.com, CMT, and others.

To date, content-security issues have kept the major labels from offering the cream of their crop to the Internet until the multi-label Secure Digital Music Initiative (SDMI) is finalized. Part of that download-framework initiative will be revealed in the coming weeks.

Recent moves by Sony Music Entertainment and Universal Music Group (UMG) have created a new sense of urgency to begin downloading sooner. Both Sony and UMG have plans to make downloaded singles available by the end of this summer, prior to SDMI's formalized framework (Billboard, May 22).

resident of Capitol

This week, Billboard inaugurates an ongoing millennium feature offering capsule commentaries from key industry figures on the entertainment business as it heads toward 2000.

What is the biggest challenge you see ahead for Capitol Records as you look into the future, in the short and long terms?

The challenge for a record company, short term and long term, is always about finding, signing, and developing career artists who will create the catalog of the future. Music is and always must remain the heart of a record company.

What excites you most about the future for your business?

The most exciting aspect of the new technology is the opportunity to have the complete recorded history of music available for downloading. Just think how great it will be when a person can download an album recorded in 1966-or 1996-that bricks-andmortar retailers no longer have space to stock.

How quickly do you think things will really change?

The new technology will provide a new alternative means of distribution but will not eliminate current bricks-and-mortar distribution, provided record companies and retailers continue to work together to improve the retail experience. If we are smart, and lucky, the entertainment business will simply add new means of distribution, which will improve the health of the business.

What mistake/misjudgment that record companies made in the 20th century would you change if you could?

The biggest one was their failure to encrypt, etc., CDs so as to limit piracy of digital information. Fortunately, they have apparently learned that lesson vis-à-vis DVD Audio.

What five things would you put in a time capsule to sum up the music business this century?

I would include a 78 rpm, a 45 rpm single, a 331/3 rpm vinyl album, a CD, and a DVD Video to show the changes in the presentation of recorded music-from one song to 10 songs limited to 45 minutes to 14 songs up to 80 minutes to an unlimited number of songs with a visual component. The changes have enabled and have forced artists to create new means of expression. Naturally the artists presented on these records would include Frank Sinatra, the Beatles, and Chris Gaines!

BY FRED BRONSON

JERUSALEM-EMI and BMG have sewn up European rights to the winning song of the 44th annual Eurovision Song Contest, "Take Me To Your Heaven," performed by Swedish vocalist

Charlotte Nilsson. EMI Belgium picked up the track for Europe except Scandinavia and the U.K. just a few hours before the competition, held May 29, according to Erwin Goegebeur, managing director of EMI Music Belgium. BMG closed its deal four days after the contest and will release the single in the U.K. June 21 (Billboard Bulletin, June 2).

In Scandinavia, where the single is on the Mariann Grammofon imprint, sales have shown a dramatic increase since Nilsson's triumph in Israel, says label manager Camilla Bjering. The single had a slow start before the contest but jumps 41-30 in its fourth week on the Swedish chart.

The winning song, a decidedly Abba-like piece of retro pop, has generated some controversy since taking first place. Swedish composer Hans Lagerholm claims that "Take Me To Your Heaven" copies his song "Tusen Och En Natt," The winning which is also the of the title Swedish-language version of the winning song. pitched. "It's not very similar," says Nylen, who has discouraged Lagerholm from pursuing his claim. "But he's convinced it is. There are four notes in the chorus line that may sound the same, that's all."

In a separate allegation, German producer David Brandes says the Eurovision winner copies his "Don't Say We're Through," writ-ten in 1997 for dance act E-Rotic

AOL Buys Make It Web Music Force

BY CHUCK TAYLOR

Internet giant America Online (AOL) has instantly become a striking force in the online music business with its purchase of Web radio pioneer Spinner.com and music technology company Nullsoft, the leading developer of Internet MP3 players.

The stock-for-stock transactions, announced June 1, are valued at $400 million by AOL.

The move is designed to give Dulles, Va.-based AOL a leading edge in the rapidly growing online music industry while dramatically trumping its customer base.

AOL president Bob Pittman says that the purchase of San Franciscobased Spinner.com will lift online music purchasing to the next level in the eyes of consumers by exposing them to a barrage of music genres. Spinner.com offers 120 niche formats, serving 1.5 million different users monthly, according to AOL.

AOL will also develop live music coverage and custom-branded music services via its AOL, AOL.com, CompuServe, Netcenter, and ICQ brands.

With its purchase of Nullsoft, AOL will be equipped to develop next-generation downloading equipment, which it will merge with Spinner. com's content and, again, utilize for its own brands. Nullsoft, the developer of the Winamp MP3 music downloading player and Shoutcast MP3 streaming audio system, is now based in Sedona, Ariz., but will relocate to San Francisco. Its products are utilized by 5 million users, AOL says.

The acquisitions, says AOL Interactive Properties president Ted Leonsis, will "help us develop new tools to make our partners' music and other audio offerings even more compelling and build the mass-market audience." He added that additional company buyouts are likely in the future to "establish our leadership in Internet music.'

AOL'S PLANS

According to Mark Mooradian, a senior analyst for Jupiter Communications, "It's unclear to me whether AOL is acquiring Nullsoft for its audio-centric products or for its user base, which can be utilized as a kind of grass-roots marketing vehicle for the expansion of programming and aggregation of audience. Everybody has backed MP3 as a [downloading] standard, but I don't know whether AOL wants to push a client that is competitive with RealNetworks and Microsoft."

The purchase of Spinner.com, he says, will also allow AOL to greatly expand its customer roster, while ushering the company into the growing realm of Internet radio: "The technology is absolutely there for Spinner.com. Online radio works really well to date."

In addition, Spinner.com will open AOL to new revenue opportunities, through audio advertising and album sales, Mooradian says. "Audio advertising is probably the most under-exploited advertising vehicle online. People like Spinner.com and Imagineradio.com have been pretty innovative with creating banner ads and interstitials, but what we haven't seen is audio advertising, which has a lot going for it.'

Further, "radio is far and away the greatest driver of album sales, and though [traditional] radio stations have built a successful media business around it, they've never actually been able to capitalize on that fact," he says. "This presents the ultimate opportunity to maximize on something that has never truly been accessible to them.'

It was unclear at deadline whether Spinner.com and Nullsoft will continue to operate as separate brand entities or be absorbed into the AOL name. Mooradian sees possibilities for either option.

"Neither Spinner.com or Nullsoft are deeply established names," he says. "Spinner is in the early stages of reaching its audience. I wouldn't be surprised to see AOL subsume that brand name."

Handy's Tout The Blues

Vets, Newcomers Share The honors

BY CHRIS MORRIS

MEMPHIS-Veteran talents and blossoming young performers split the honors at the 20th annual W.C. Handy Blues Awards ceremony May 27 at the Orpheum Theatre here, as B.B. King, Etta James, Robert Lockwood Jr., Susan Tedeschi, and Keb' Mo' all collected multiple trophies.

King was named blues entertainer of the year, and his MCA album "Blues On The Bayou" was selected as contemporary blues album of the year. James was chosen soul/blues female artist of the year, while her Private Music set "Life, Love & The Blues" won the nod as soul/blues album of the year. Lockwood-who also performed during the show—was tapped as traditional blues male artist of the year, and his Verve collection "I Got To Have Me A Woman" was dubbed traditional blues album of the year.

Tone-Cool Records artist Tedeschi took best new blues artist and contemporary blues female artist of the year honors. Perennial Handys favorite Keb' Mo' took home the contemporary blues male artist of the year and acoustic blues artist of the year statuettes; "Soon As I Get Paid," a track from his OKeh/550 Music album "Slow Down" that was co-written with John Lewis Parker, was named blues song of the year.

Gersh, Silva Outline Plans For DEN

BY MELINDA NEWMAN

LOS ANGELES—As the new copresidents of DEN Music Group, Gary Gersh and John Silva aim to take the marriage of music and the Internet to new heights for both baby bands and established artists.

DEN, which stands for Digital Entertainment Network, is a new Santa Monica, Calif.-based Internet programmer that is in the midst of bowing 30 youth-oriented programs on its site, all of which will include music. Eventually, the site will also host a digital radio network.

DEN Music Group will sign artists to the DEN label and promote them through the Internet site, as well as work with artists on traditional labels to provide them exposure via DEN.

Both Gersh and Silva stress that the Internet emphasis doesn't eliminate the traditional means of selling records. "The DEN Music Group will have promotion people and marketing people and A&R people and publicity people," says Gersh, noting that the company's first hire is former Capitol executive Phil Costello (Billboard, June 5).

"Clearly there is hard distribution that exists today that is very important, and we want to have giant-selling acts," Gersh continues, "We're not going to abandon the way in which people want to buy music. For us, people going to record stores is no different than them choosing a format by which they download it on DEN."

Gersh and Silva say they are meeting with potential hard media distributors—both indie and major but they have made no decision yet.

When it comes to exposing artists and music on www.den.net, Gersh and Silva say, the possibilities are "To be presidents of the DEN Music Group is not just about putting music in the shows; it's to have music artists create shows," says Gersh. "You can very logically see Puff have done theoretically, and saying, 'I want to do a Bad Boy show; I want to have my new band perform on a show; I want to sell my merchandise, my clothing, my records through DEN.'

Artists will be encouraged to design their own plans. "We'll present the artist the opportunities that exist right now, and he or she might say, I'm not comfortable with any of these, but I have an idea of my own that I think is a way for me to reach my audience,' " says Silva. "Then, we'd all get together with [DEN president | David Neuman and say, 'Can we produce a program that will help the artist?' One of the first things we might do is send files of the artist's music out and get feedback from the audience. And if they like it, we'll produce the show."

Silva and Gersh stress that they will maintain Gas Entertainment, the new entity that started last year

Pullout Of Labels' Group Leaves Victoires Hanging

PARIS —The future of the annual French music industry Victoires de la Musique awards show remains in doubt following a row between labels' and musicians' representatives, despite the president of the event's organizing body temporarily withdrawing her resignation offer (Billboard Bulletin, May 24).

After a Victoires board meeting, president Laurence Le Ny announced May 20 that she had "suspended" her offer to resign from the organization until the next board meeting, scheduled for June 18. According to sources close to the Victoires, Le Ny's decision is intended to give the Victoires members some time to explore solutions to resolve the crisis currently afflicting the body. Le Ny is also managing director of Warner's WEA Music label in France.

The Victoires show has been in crisis for several weeks, following the withdrawal from the event of labels' body SNEP, which represents all the majors and several independents in France (Billboard Bulletin, May 10). SNEP, which voted for the move at a regular board meeting May 6, had been concerned by what it saw as an aggressive attitude from musicians' union SNAM.

The latter had criticized the Victoires for awarding the musical "Notre Dame De Paris" best concert and song honors at the show in February. SNAM representatives claimed that as "Notre Dame" was recorded outside France with non-French musicians, it should not have qualified as a French production. Before and after the Victoires, SNAM had complained publicly and to the Victoires board about the award.

KOCH International announces

Mann Named House Of Blues Prez

president of House of Blues (HOB) Media Properties, Lou Mann plans to make the name as well-known for its media offerings as for its nightclub chain.

The House of Blues has a lot of underutilized assets right now," says Mann. "For example, there used to be a television show, and one of my responsibilities is to bring that back again. We have a radio syndication program that needs to be expanded."

In addition to overseeing HOB's radio and television business, Mann will also handle its Internet and digital activities and HOR's record label, which is distributed through Platinum Entertainment.

Mann, an 11-year vet of Capitol Records, left his post as senior VP/GM on June 4 (BillboardBulletin, June 3). He starts his new position July 1. A Capitol Records representative says that no decision has yet been made as to whether Mann will be replaced; in the meantime, executives reporting to Mann will report to Roy Lott,

MANN

While news of his departure came as a surprise, Mann stresses that it had nothing to do with the appointment of new label president Lott last year. "This has to do with a growth opportunity for me," he says. "The landscape of our business is changing, and I wanted to be at the forefront with House of Blues. They afford me the chance to be at the front of the curve instead of behind the curve. I'd like to say there's more intrigue than that, but there's not. Roy's been really great. I've had an incredible run at Capitol.'

The House of Blues record label has primarily focused on compilations. While Mann does not yet have specific plans for change, he does want to take an active role in the imprint. "The guys from Platinum have done a great job. They've done these compilations with the House of Blues' knowledge, but no one's really paid attention from the House of Blues. Now we're going to pay more attention."

For Mann, the job means integrating all the media facets. "These are all components of one big picture," he says. "These properties have been operating by themselves. My role is to tie them all together instead of having them function as independent units."

Parsons Tribute Draws Devotees

Almo Sounds Homage To Country-Rocker Features Star Slate

BY CHRIS MORRIS

LOS ANGELES—A galaxy of stars will pay homage to the late forefather of country/rock on Almo Sounds' July 13 release "Return Of The Grievous Angel: A Tribute To Gram

Parsons "

Georgia-born singer/songwriter Parsons helped forge the Byrds' groundbreaking 1968 country/rock album "Sweetheart Of The Rodeo." He went on to found his own pathfinding country/rock group, the Flying Burrito Brothers, which he fronted from 1969-70. He then left to explore his own brand of "cosmic American music" on two Warner Bros. solo albums. Before his second solo record was released, the hardliving musician died in a motel room in Joshua Tree, Calif., on Sept. 19, 1973. He was only 26.

Though Parsons' body of work is relatively small, it has deeply influenced three generations of musicians: L.A. country/rock bands of the '70s, such as the Eagles and Poco (who respectively recorded the Parsons tributes "My Man" and "Crazy Eyes"); early-'80s L.A. "cowpunk" bands like Lone Justice, Rank & File, and the Long Ryders (whose leader, Sid Griffin, wrote a book about Parsons); and the alt.country bands of the '90s, from Uncle Tupelo on down.

Almo Sounds artist Gillian Welch, who performs "Hickory Wind" on the tribute album with partner Dave Rawlings, sees the pervasive impact of Parsons in her work and that of others.

"His music really played a part in my finding old-time country and then further on," Welch says. "Through him, I got into Buck Owens and Merle Haggard, and then after that I got into Lefty Frizzell... Epic, VH1 Making It Summer's Summer

BY MICHAEL PAOLETTA

NEW YORK—Summer officially begins June 21. On the evening before, music cable network VH1 will premiere "VH1 Presents Donna Summer: Live & More—Encore!," a concert taped Feb. 4 in New York (Dance Trax, Billboard, Feb. 20), as well as a "Behind The Music" episode spotlighting the artist.

Two days later, on June 22, Epic Records will issue the concert's accompanying album, "VH1 Presents Donna Summer: Live & More—Encore!," while Epic Music Video will release the video version of the concert, which includes four additional songs.

The album will be available in a variety of formats: single CD, limited-edition double-vinyl, and a limited-edition CD/VHS box.

"It's really looking like it's going to be Summer's summer," says Frank Ceraolo, senior director of marketing/A&R at Epic. "To say that we're excited about this project would be an understatement. It's a dream come true."

Lee Chesnut, VP of A&R at the label, concurs. "To work with her is to realize what a professional she is," he says.

"This is only the beginning for Donna at the label. We are truly committed to her."

Epic signed the multimillionselling, five-time-Grammy-winning Summer to a multi-album deal earlier this year (Dance Trax, Billboard, Feb. 13). According to the singer, it's been a long time

Incognito Reveals Adventurous Blend On Blue Thumb/Verve's 'Time'

NEW YORK—For Jean-Paul "Bluey" Maunick, the mastermind behind the British soul/jazz/funk collective Incognito, the creation of music is only worthwhile if it continually challenges the parameters of popular music. Of course, Maunick also realizes the importance of translating one's desired soundscape into a listenable reality.

With the July 20 release of "No Time Like The Future" on Blue Thumb/Verve, Incognito remains a musical entity that's as visionary as it is historically reverent.

Talkin' Loud U.K., the label to which Incognito is directly signed, released the album April 19 in the U.K.

"I always like to take the listener on a musical adventure," says Maunick, the founding member of influential '80s U.K. bands Light Of The World and Freeez. "My manual to making music is Marvin Gaye's 'What's Going On.' That album was all about layering. Everything had its proper place; no one sound dominated."

Like Incognito's previous six albums, "No Time Like The Future" epitomizes this sentiment. Produced by Maunick and Simon Cotsworth, the soul-soaked 10-track album is a musical melding of Afro-Cuban beats, samba rhythms, dazz (discojazz) improvisations, and house music workouts. It spotlights more than 50 musicians, including the horn section of the Cuban band Irakere. Featured vocalists include Incognito veterans Maysa and Jocelyn Brown, as well as newcomer Karen Bernod.

Maunick is quick to note that this is the first Incognito album to be completed in his new home studio.

"It was a real triumph over adversity," he says. Over the course of two years, the studio was flooded twice.

"This album could've been the breaking of me," he says, "but it turned out to be the making of me. In a way, I've come out of the darkness."

Maunick points to song titles like "Wild And Peaceful," "Fearless," "Centre Of The Sun," and "Black Rain"—all published through Chrysalis Music U.K—as proof.

"With this album, I am so alive," he says.

So, too, is Nate Herr, VP of marketing at Verve Music Group.

"We're really excited about this album," says Herr. "It's been two years since Incognito's last album ["Beneath The Surface"], and we're sensing much anticipation from fans, radio, retailers, and distributors. Without question, Incognito is an act with a profile."

On July 13, the label will service adult R&B and AC radio stations with the album track "More Of Myself," which features Bernod on vocals. The promo-only single will include remixes by Organized Noize and Maunick, as well as the original version.

MAUNICK OF INCOGNITO

This will be preceded, on June 22, by the set's first commercial single, a spirited remake of the Jones Girls' chestnut "Nights Over Egypt." It features remixes by Masters At Work and the soulful wailings of Brown and Maysa.

According to Herr, the vinyl-only 12-inch single will be heavily promoted to club and radio DJs.

In the U.K., the Mercury Records-distributed Talkin' Loud serviced radio and clubs with two singles: "Nights Over Egypt" and "It Ain't Easy." In July, the label will release "More Of Myself" as a commercial single.

Dave Dickinson, music director of adult R&B station WHUR Washington, D.C., is quite fond of the hand.

"They're great," he says. "We've supported them in the past. They're definitely one of our core artists. Incognito songs like 'Shade Of Blue,' 'Still A Friend Of Mine,' and 'Deep Waters' still get played on our station."

Chances are good, says Dickinson, that the station will soon be playing "Nights Over Egypt." Says the music director, "We still play the original by the Jones Girls, so it would make perfect sense for us to to go with Incognito's version."

A video for "Nights Over Egypt" will be serviced in the near future to BET and other video outlets, says Herr, who adds that the video will be included on the enhanced CD of "No Time Like The Future." The enhanced CD will also feature an Incognito photo gallery.

Once the album is in stores, Herr says, listening posts will be a priority for the label.

"People need to hear it," he says.
"This album makes an immediate impact on the listener."

David Shebiro, owner of the New York specialty shop Rebel Rebel, concurs.

"This album has some real classic gems on it," he says. "We quickly sold out of our import copies of 'Nights Over Egypt' earlier this year. And since then, customers have been inquiring about the new album. July 20 won't come soon enough."

One week before the album's release, Incognito will embark on its worldwide tour, which begins and ends in Japan.

Incognito is managed by Stephen King of London-based Ricochet. Joe Brauner of New York-based Agency for the Performing Arts handles the act's bookings for North America, while Paul Boswell of the London-based Free Trade Agency handles bookings for the rest of the world.

Astralwerks' Chemical Brothers Aim Beyond Dancefloors

BY DYLAN SIEGLER

NEW YORK—When English electronic music idols the Chemical Brothers released the mix CD "Brothers Gonna Work It Out" last fall, the duo's intent was not simply to keep the fans happy and set up its new album, "Surrender," due in stores July 13 from Astralwerks.

"It got something out of our system," offers Chemical Brother Tom Rowlands, who, along with Ed Simons, has been a DJ and an electronic music programmer for a decade. "Putting all those records we'd been DJing with to rest enabled us to make the record we wanted to make, with a different kind of sound.'

"Surrender" does represent a new direction for the Manchester, England, natives, incorporating house, ambient, rock, and straight-ahead pop sensibilities with their trademark sound—a head-spinningly adventurous yet accessible techno.

"We wanted to keep the power and energy of the records we did before but do it in a different way," explains Rowlands.

"A lot of people have grown up with our music," says Simons, "so we want to keep providing a soundtrack for them."

CHEMICAL BROTHERS

Hole" (which reached No. 14 on The Billboard 200) included many tracks the duo created when they were DJs at club nights like London's Heavenly Social, where the Chemicals were residents in 1996.

"We listen to quite banging dance music at home," says Rowlands. "And we perceive the dancefloor as a place where people are receptive and openminded and you can throw them strange things that are interesting to listen to."

"The new album is still born from the clubs," continues Simons. Yet while tracks like "Under The Influence" and "The Sunshine Underground" lend themselves to club use and will be serviced to DJs on vinyl, "it isn't all directly providing music for the DJ."

Specifically, tracks like "Dream On" and "Asleep From Day" represent a kinder, gentler Chemical Brothers that may take club-oriented fans by surprise. The two songs, completed with Mercury Rev's Jonathan Donahue and Mazzy Star's Hope Sandoval, respectively, are impressive collaborations in the tradition the Chemicals inaugurated on the last album.

"We like working with people whose music we're great fans of, and we established nice relationships working with Noel Gallagher and

E.G. Daily Reveals A Decade Of Material On Self-Released 'Walls'

BY LARRY FLICK

NEW YORK—E.G. Daily's not interested in things that don't flow—particularly when it comes to her career. Evidence of that philosophy lies within her new self-made disc, "Tearin' Down The Walls," which offers material she's written over the past 10-plus years. The album is on Daily's own label, Daily Productions.

"You can't force creativity," she says of the set, which is now available via her Web site (www.egdaily.com) and due to hit retail July 13—thanks to a distribution deal with Nile Rodgers' new Sumthing Else label. "It has to unfold organically. Otherwise, it just doesn't work."

DAILY

It was that mind-set that saw the L.A.-rooted singer/tunesmith briefly move away from her life as a recording artist nearly a decade ago—despite the fact that she was sitting pretty atop the club heap with such dance/pop ditties as "Say It, Say It," "Mind Over Matter," and the now-classic "Love In The Shadows."

"I wasn't getting the attention I needed from my label at the time," she says of A&M Records, which she says was preoccupied with breaking Janet Jackson's budding career. "It was frustrating and unnecessary, so I moved on "

Daily's name may have been absent from the charts and dancefloors, but her voice has remained omnipresent. The top gun of the voice-over industry, she's lent her distinctive pipes to countless commercials and various other TV and film projects—most notably Nickelodeon's "Rugrats," on which she plays the indomitable Tommy Pickles.

"It's been a blast," she says. "And it's allowed me to continue making music on my terms and no one else's."

Enter "Tearing Down The Walls," a sleek set of rock-infused pop tunes that showcase Daily as a formidable radio diva-in-waiting. Blending acoustic strumming with sweet, singalong choruses, she tempers the simplicity of her music with refreshingly literate lyrics—most notably on the upbeat, single-worthy "Don't Even Care."

"This record is filled with songs that just flowed out of me," she says. "I set out to make a record that people could take home and listen to for years to come."

Some indie retailers agree. "The market is jam-packed with female artists right now, but this record's so fresh and stands apart from the rest," says Vincent Buono, manager of Dealer Discs, an outlet in Minneapolis.

Daily is playing clubs in Los Angeles, with an eye toward spreading out as interest in the project demands.

PUTTING THOUGHTS INTO ACTION: Many of us see human atrocities on the nightly news, shake our heads, and wonder what we can do to help before getting on with our daily lives. For David Massey, executive VP of Epic/550, one day wondering wasn't enough "the live version is completely different from the studio." While no tracks were written specifically for the project, many acts nonetheless donated songs that tied in to the suffering. "The word went out to artists that we were looking when it came to the current situation in Kosovo.

"It was the weekend about [four] weeks ago, and it seemed like two things," he says. "There was going to be a desperate need for help; those refugees were going to be there for a while in the camps, and you knew there was going to be a problem with sanitation and food. The second thought was, 'We've got the kind of artists on Epic and contact with other artists that we could really raise some serious money, and we can truly make a difference."

With a fire in his belly, Massey returned to work that Monday and began making calls. "I got together a few colleagues and said I wanted to make a rock record, so I started compiling a list of possible artists. Along with Korn, Rage Against The Machine, and Oasis, Pearl Jam were in the first batch that sprung to mind."

The result is "No Boundaries: A Benefit For

The result is "No Boundaries: A Benefit For The Kosovar Refugees," out June 15 worldwide. Proceeds go to Doctors Without Borders, CARE, and Oxfam. Massey says advance word on the album is so strong that Epic will ship in excess of 350,000 units in the U.S. alone.

In a move that the label hopes will spur a trend, Epic is donating $1 million to the charities before the first album is even in the stores. "With charity records, there's always an ambiguity. What is it, really? I wanted to show we were serious right away. We wanted to give them as much money as we can afford to risk upfront and get it to them in a speedy fashion."

The set primarily features previously unreleased, live, or alternate versions of tracks by some of rock's top artists. In addition to the acts Massey mentions, the disc includes Alanis Morissette, the Wallflowers, Indigo Girls, Neil Young, Sarah McLachlan, Peter Gabriel, Black Sabbath, Bush, Ben Folds Five, Jamiroquai, and Tori Amos.

Indigo Girls contributed a live version of "Go," a song that will be featured on their forthcoming album. The duo is the only act to give an entirely new track. "I didn't think we should choose a track that will go on the next album, but it's Amy [Ray's] song, and she got the decision," says the duo's Emily Saliers. Plus, Saliers adds, to the suffering.

UTTING THOUGHTS INTO ACTION: Many of us "the live version is completely different from the studio."

"The word went out to artists that we were looking for substance," says Massey. "We were looking for something not previously released and something that had meaning that reflected the cause in some way. The artists were incredibly active."

The participating labels were also active. "From start to finish, the project was put together in two weeks," says Massey. "The other labels were incredible and very, very supportive. It was a very positive experience."

Collaboration was also key when it came time to decide which charities would receive proceeds from the album's sales. Massey made sure to take the acts' political concerns into account.

As it turns out, many of them had strong opinions. "We had some issues with some of the original groups that were planned," says Saliers. "They had ties to the United Nations and NATO, and they're part of the perpetrators there."

To make the album more appealing internationally, Massey says that in key territories, like Latin America, Asia, and Europe, the label has "let our affiliates add two of their own tracks."

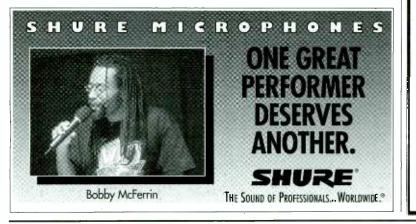

"The CD is just about 67 minutes," he says. "We've deliberately left enough time to add tracks. It's Manic Street Preachers and Suede in Europe. Other regions will add others. We think it will increase sales."

Also bringing in money is a commercial single for the opening track, Pearl Jam's "Last Kiss," which comes out Tuesday (8). "All proceeds from the single will go to CARE," says Massey. "That was Pearl Jam's request."

Epic has secured counter-bin placement for the single in more than 2,500 retail stores, says Epic VP of marketing Chris Poppe. Epic is also making a counter bin for the album, and header cards have been placed in the bins for each participating artist, directing customers to the "No Boundaries" album. Additionally, a number of magazines have donated advertising space for the album. A TV spot has been shot, and Poppe hopes broadcasters will be as generous as magazines have been with free advertising. All ads highlight the album's Web site—www.no-boundaries.org—as well as the sites for the beneficiary charities.

Massey is considering a concert for Kosovo, although another one, Rock for Refugees, is already being planned for August in New York.

"As the situation unfolds, we're looking at different opportunities," says Massey. "The first thing is to really maximize the success of the record."

Chris Rock Goes For 'Bigger & Blacker' With His 2nd DreamWorks Set

BY LARRY FLICK

NEW YORK—Despite the fact that he's a voracious music fan, don't look for Chris Rock to burst into song on his second DreamWorks album, "Bigger & Blacker," due in stores July 13.

"No way!" exclaims the comedian/actor with a laugh. "As much as I'd love to, it just wouldn't be a good idea. I'm not interested in that kind of public humiliation."

That said, Rock does dabble in the occasional song parody on the set, which also consists of sketches and snippets of his new stand-up routine. Working with producer Prince Paul, he revamps the Rolling Stones nugget "Brown Sugar" into "White Bitches," while adding his own lyrical spin to the recent Baz Luhrmann hit, "Everybody's Free (To Wear Sunscreen)."

"I love great singers and rappers. So, instead of trying it myself, I've invited some great people to join me on the record," Rock says, noting the guest appearances of Biz Markie, Ol' Dirty Bastard, Ice Cube, and Gerald Levert.

"Bigger & Blacker" follows Rock's 1996 debut, "Bring The Pain," which sold 300,000 copies, according to SoundScan. It's a respectable sales figure that the label hopes to far exceed with the new project.

"We're coming into the market with an artist whose overall visibility has increased by leaps and bounds," says Michael Ostin, one of the principal executives at Dream-Works. "Chris is a major movie starnow. As a comedian, he's toured far more extensively, and he's been playing larger venues. If we have any challenge, it will be ensuring a public awareness of this new record. Once we accomplish that, we believe people will come to the table."

Tim Devin, GM of Tower Records in New York, agrees, noting Rock's "good guy" public image. "By and large, people really like him. His last album did well for us, so I think it's safe to assume that the new album will as well—if not better."

"Bigger & Blacker" will benefit from cross-promotional efforts coordinated with HBO, which will premiere a new Rock special with the same name July 10. Although the two projects share some material, the album has many of its own exclusive elements.

Also, the HBO special will be culled from performances June 18 and 19 at the Apollo Theatre in New York, while the album's live content has been taken from Rock's ongoing stand-up tour of the U.S.

"It's a pleasure to be in total sync with HBO," Ostin says. "Even the photographic images are the same this time, which makes cross-promotion simpler and ultimately more effective."

By the time "Bigger & Blacker" hits retail, Rock will have been on the road for several months. His tour will end shortly before the album bows, though he'll be an omnipresent media figure. "We've already secured spots on 'Late Show With David Letterman' and the Howard Stern show for the day of release," Ostin says, adding that a spree of magazine coverage is in the works, starting with the July 6 cover of TV Guide.

At this point, the project's radio future remains a point of discussion. "We're still examining the material and deciding whether or not we have a single to pull," Ostin says. "We're thinking that Baz Luhrmann cover is a strong possibility, though we're also considering the possibility of pulling sketches and stand-up bits to service to stations, too."

All of this suits Rock, who says he "loves" being a recording artist. "It goes straight to the fans. There's an immediate, intimate connection that you can't always have with a film or television show."

He adds that he's been preparing for "Bigger & Blacker" for two years now. "From the moment we finished the last album, I started calling [Prince] Paul and leaving ideas for the album on his answering machine. By the time we were ready to talk about doing this album, we had a ton of stuff to sift through."

In addition to the song parodies, Rock incorporates elements of music into his material via bits like "Jokes Produced By Roger Troutman," on which he delivers jokes through a vocoder:

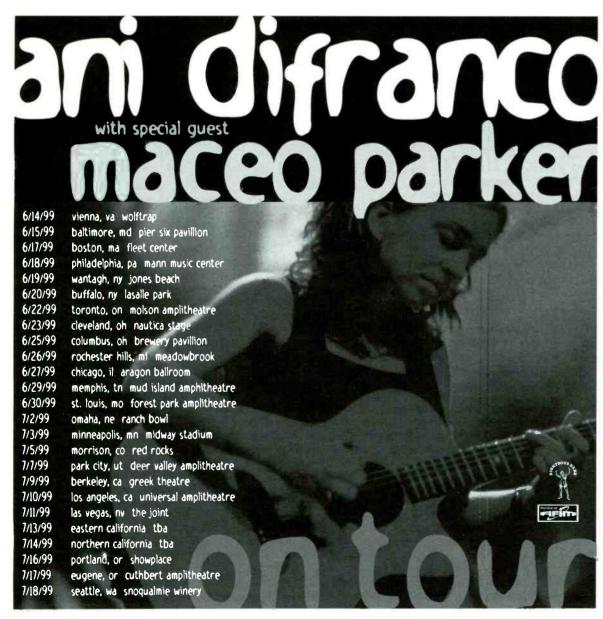

"It kinda has that George Clinton/protector of the funk vibe," he says. "Only I wanna be protector of the funny."

Rock, who is managed by Michael Rotenberg of Three Arts Entertainment, admits that he is already thinking about the next album. "My mind is always moving," he says. "But I've also gotta confess that I really dig having my own CD section in record stores.

"Growing up, I'd spend any money I could get on music. I loved the whole experience of going into a record store. Even now, I'm one of those guys who is in record stores every single Tuesday, picking up new stuff. It'll be a total rush to walk into a store on July 13 and see my own CD there."

Look At Her. Geri Halliwell visited Capitol Records in Los Angeles to unveil her first post-Spice Girls solo single, "Look At Me." The track, which went to radio worldwide May 17, was written and produced by the artist with Paul Wilson and Andy Watkins. It's accompanied by a video directed by Vaughn Arnell. Her album is due June 29. Pictured with Halliwell is label president/CEO Roy Lott.

L. Subramaniam Links Music Of The World With Atlantic's 'Global Fusion'

BY JIM BESSMAN

NEW YORK-Legendary Indian violinist L. Subramaniam, whose electric music fusion projects have ranged from Western classical to jazz collaborations, is taking the concept of world music to a new level.

His latest album, "Global Fusion," due on Atlantic July 13, merges the music of five continents in search of "a common platform of expression," as he puts it—his goal being to promote "universal understanding and peace through music."

The disc, released internationally May 3 on France's Erato Detour label, features five pieces written and performed by Subramaniam on violin, in combination with various world music voices and instruments-including Australian didgeridoo, Indian and African percussion, Japanese koto, Spanish guitar, Chinese erhu, and Indonesian chant-

"It mixes many different traditions and cultures, but the violin is present in all traditions—and is therefore a common thread," says Subramaniam, who has dedicated the disc to his friend Yehudi Menuhin, who died in March and was one of a legion of diverse world musicians with whom he has collaborated. Among the set's guests are Struntz & Farah guitarist Jorge Struntz, koto player Miya Masaoka, erhu player Jie Bing Chen, star Indian vocalist Kavita Krishnamurti, and vocalist Seetaa Subramaniam, the violinist's daughter, who sings with India's venerable Madras Musical Association Choir.

"Even though there are so many different kinds of music, everything is based on the same seven notes, continues Subramaniam. "Everything else is just an extension through different ornamentation based on cultural expression. For instance, in Indian traditional violin we use slides and microtones, whereas Western violin emphasizes vibrato and thrills. But it's all basically the same when you go to the kinds of world music traditions can fit—and to avoid confusion with genre-specific fusion music categories.

The multicultural and stylistically flexible Subramaniam, whose own musical foundation is the south Indian Carnatic classical music style, has gained a reputation as a classical and jazz fusion artist, especially because of his work with jazz greats like Herbie Hancock and the Crusaders. The "Global Fusion" title was selected expressly as a "big umbrella," he says, under which all (Continued on next page)

"It's the kind of record we wait for," says Arthur Moorhead, Atlantic's VP of associated labels. "It speaks to people who love classical Indian music, world music, and those who know Subramaniam's high profile in the jazz fusion world. It goes in so many different directions that it's almost a question of, 'Geez, what can't we do?'"

Accordingly, Atlantic looks to put "Global Fusion" in as many bins as possible.

"We hope to convince retailers to cross-merchandise it in the world and jazz sections, so we're taking ads in consumer magazines like Jazziz and Rhythm Music," says Moorhead. "It's such an infectious record, loaded with melody and rhythm and the Indian equivalent of swing. At the top of the list is to get the music before people, through listening stations and radio."

The label is servicing the album in late June to world music, college, and possibly jazz formats and may create an edit of a couple of the more lengthy tracks to make them more radio-friendly.

"This is a guy who's played with George Harrison, Ravi Shankar, George Duke, and Stephane Grappelli," says Moorhead, noting the appeal of such varied Subramaniam associates. The Indian community, he adds, will be serviced by the Intercultural Niche Strategies indie marketing firm, which specializes in that market.

The release of "Global Fusion" is part of a comprehensive comeback of sorts for Subramaniam, four years following the death of his wife, Viji. The artist, whose music is published by Niranjani Music (BMI) and who is managed and booked by Dr. Narayan Raman in Indianapolis, will perform "Global Fusion" concerts in June in Chicago, in August in New York, and later this year in Europe and India.

Other activities include an August DVD release of a recent 75-minute biographical French TV documentary and the completion of several recording projects suspended after Viji's death, including albums with the late Grappelli, Jean-Pierre Rampal, and Menuhin. Subramaniam is also preparing his first score for commercial Indian cinema, having already scored acclaimed Indian art films like "Salaam Bombay!"

Continental Drift UNSIGNED ARIISTS AND REGIONAL NEWS

LOCAL HEROES: On June 24, New York's famed Bowery Ballroom will present the first installment of "Local Heroes NYC," a new monthly showcase series that will feature up-and-coming artists.

The show promises to be an A&R hunting ground, thanks largely to its stellar lineup of artists—each of whose music merits close investigation. The evening will open with the Paul Ruderman Band (Billboard, Dec. 12, 1998), a rhythm-rooted acoustic rock outfit that's been building a live following since becoming a fixture in such local venues as the Bottom Line, Mercury Lounge, and Fez. For a clear vision of the group's sound, think Dave Matthews Band with the sensitive introspection of early Jackson Browne.

Ruderman will be followed by Philip Foxman & Prime 8, who deftly contrast elements of dark, worldly storytelling with vibrant, folkfueled rock instrumentation. Who knew fiddles could kick so hard?

Next up is Rogue's March, a wildly diverse act that manages to sew threads of punk, country, and cabaret into an astonishingly cohesive sound. For proof, check out the band's self-made disc, "Chaser." In addition to offering a handful of memorable tunes, the set showcases a star-powered front man in Joe Hurley.

Rounding out the evening is Peter Salett, who earned critical praise for his sterling self-made 1998 disc, "Paintings Of These Days." He's currently stomping in support of a new EP, "Where I Was," which shows him further mining an acoustic rock sound that is rife with infectious pop melodies and sticky choruses.

In short, it'll be an evening not to be missed. And if you can't get there, get your hands on each act's disc. They provide a much-needed respite from the hits of the moment.

BROTHERLY LOVE: Is there room for just one more teen-friendly boy group on the top 40 landscape? Well, not really—unless it has an interesting edge or at least a few tasty potential hits. The Brooklyn, N.Y.-rooted DuO offers a bit of both.

The videogenic sibling team of Tommy and Chris O'Connor are shopping a demo of material that's deep in the pocket of current radio trends but with a decidedly sharp hip-hop edge. In recent months, they've been in the studio with a handful of notable producers—including "Bassy"

Bob Brockman, Full Force, and Swing Central Station. The results are hit-worthy tracks like the sultry rhythm ballad "For So Long" and the anthemic jeep cruiser "Ooh La, La, La."

The O'Connor boys have recently taken a break from showcases in New York and Los Angeles to open several East Coast shows for 98°. The gigs went so well that there's talk

Jonathan Donahue on 'Dig Your Own Hole,' so there's that continuity," says Rowlands.

The Chemicals' last collaboration with Oasis' Gallagher-"Setting Sun"-reached No. 80 on The Billboard Hot 100 and No. 1 on the U.K. singles chart. "Let Forever Be," the new album's catchy, rock-tinged Gallagher track, will be the first radio single from "Surrender."

Oedipus, VP/PD at modern rock station WBCN Boston, says, "The single fits perfectly, and we added it as soon as it was available. It's another distinctive sound that gives the radio station character, and we're proud to feature the band." He notes that remixes are becoming "increasingly viable" at mainstream radio, which could add spins for the Chemical Brothers.

"The bottom line is that this will be the largest promotional push ever for Astralwerks," says Errol Kolosine, the label's GM. The album will have a "massive marketing campaign" focusing on radio, TV, and print media. "We're going to make it so you can't possibly not know that this album is coming out," he says. The Chemical Brothers will begin an "extensive U.S. tour" in June, according to the label.

"We want to sell a million albums in the States, which with the kind of music they make is not easy," says Bart Cools, international marketing manager at the Chemicals' U.K. label home, Virgin. "But the album they've delivered now gives us a better chance, because radio is going to find it easier to play."

"Dig Your Own Hole" sold 1.7 million units worldwide, according to Virgin, and it has been certified platinum in the U.K. (more than 300,000 units sold), Canada (100,000), New Zealand (15,000), and Japan (200,000). In the rest of Europe, says Cools, "the Chemical Brothers are hovering just under gold. My personal target is to get over that hurdle." "Brothers Gonna Work It Out" sold most of its worldwide 400,000 units in the U.S., according to Virgin.

Orla Lee, senior product manager at Virgin Ú.K., says, "It'll be a very visible campaign from pre-release, starting with the single "Hey Boy, Hey Girl" in late May.

"They are such a household name," says Lee of the respect the act enjoys in the U.K. "The No. 1 single with Noel from Oasis opened the doors to a totally different audience, and I think they've crossed that barrier now from being a dance band to being a more mainstream act.'

At U.S. retail, the act has gained respect as well. "We've always been a strong Chemical Brothers account,' says buyer Paul Marabito of New Jersey-based Compact Disc World. "The last studio album debuted on the top of our charts, and with names like Noel Gallagher and Hope Sandoval, this is definitely something our customers are excited about.'

"'Dig Your Own Hole' came along when dance music was transferring over into album sales, and it was a very successful No. 1 album for us," recalls Jonathan Rees, head of rock and pop at the U.K.'s HMV chain. 'The boundaries between rock and dance are blurring with every release that comes through," he says. 'It's a natural progression.

"We feel that people who've been into our music will go with us on this one," says Simons.

Adds Rowlands, "We're not disowning where we come from or the records we made before but carrying it on. That's how bands get better.'

Assistance in preparing this story was provided by Sally Stratton in London.

Have A 'Night Cap.' New York jazz vocalist Patrick Arena has been touring the U.S. in support of his self-made debut, "Night Cap," a critically praised project that combines fresh interpretations of such pop standards as "Stardust" and "Embraceable You" with new material. Arena produced the project with musician/arranger Andy Monroe.

Blue is a mysterious color, hue of illness and nobility, the rarest color in nature. It is the color of ambiguous depth, of the heavens and of the abyss at once; blue is the color of the shadow side, the tint of the marvelous and the inexplicable, of desire, of knowledge, of the blue movie, of blue talk, of raw meat and rare steak, of melancholy and the unexpected (once in a blue moon, out of the blue). It is the color of the headboard in room 810.

BILLBOARD'S WEEKLY COVERAGE OF HOT PROSPECTS FOR THE HEATSEEKERS CHART . BY CARLA HAY

SHOOTING FOR STAR-DOM: British pop/rock band Shooter, fronted by lead singer Luciana Caproso, has already been building a buzz before the release of its C2/Columbia debut album.

Move Over Mya. Terry Dexter is an R&B singer/songwriter from Detroit who was discovered by University Entertainment founder Hago Islam, who also discovered and developed Mva. Dexter's self-titled debut album (due July 13 on University/Warner Bros.) features the single "Better Than Me." Producers on the set include Darryl Pearson (Jodeci, Mya, Dru Hill), Manuel Seal (Xscape, Mariah Carey), and Sauce (Eric Benét, Will Smith).

"... And Your Point?," due June 29. The band's first single, "Life's A Bitch," is also featured on the "Songs From Dawson's Creek" soundtrack. Further tying in the "Dawson's Creek" connection, the video for "Life's A Bitch" was shot on the Wilmington, N.C., location where the TV series is filmed. Shooter will perform June 27 at a "Dawson's Creek" event, in which the winner of a national radio contest will be flown to the set.

C2 is targeting top 40 radio for "Life's A Bitch." The song is already getting airplay on mainstream top 40 stations like KBKS Seattle, WHYI Miami, and WRVW Nashville.

Meanwhile. Shooter has been on a U.S. club tour with C2/Columbia labelmates Splender. Shooter is also confirmed for the DKNY College Tour, a developingartist package tour that will hit the U.S. concert trail this September.

GOSPEL MOBB: Gospel act Brent Jones & T.P. Mobb may draw comparisons to Kirk Franklin and God's Property by taking a group of young singers and blending old-school gospel with contemporary R&B/ hip-hop beats. Brent Jones &

Fit To Be King. Mark King is the former leader/bass player of British pop band Level 42, which was best known for the 1985 hit "Something About You." King's solo album, "One Man" (Pryamid/Rhino Records), features an AC/pop style of music. It's his first recorded output in seven vears

T.P. Mobb (T.P. stands for "total praise") formed in 1992 and have made several live appearances around the West Coast, including the Gospel Music Workshop of America. The group has also been seen performing on BET. Brent Jones & T.P. Mobb's self-titled debut album is due June 22 on indie label Holy Roller Entertainment.

Rhythm Logic is a jazz band of seasoned musicians who have played with some of the biggest names in music. Keyboardist Brian Simpson has worked with Janet Jackson, George Duke, and Larry Carlton, among others. Drummer Michael White and guitarist Ron Smith spent nearly 15 years with Maze Featuring Frankie Beverly, while bass player Dwayne Smith's credits include stints with Lee Ritenour and Natalie Cole.

Rhythm Logic's self-titled debut album is due July 6 on Zebra/Sire. The first single from the album is "Full Speed," which has been serviced to jazz and new age radio. Guesting on the album is Incognito vocalist Maysa Leak, who performs on the tracks "LG.Y." and "Fantasy." Other guest vocalists on the album are Alex Brown.

Andrews Blues. In the tradition of Stevie Ray Vaughan and Jonny Lang, singer/guitarist Jake Andrews serves up rock with a bluesy style. Andrews' debut album, "Time To Burn" (Jericho/Sire), features the title track, which has hit the top 40 of the Mainstream Rock Tracks chart. A native of Austin, Texas, the 19-year-old Andrews has toured with George Thorogood. Upcoming Andrews tour dates include June 24 in New York and June 26 in Mansfield, Mass.

Bridgette Bryant, and Phil Perry. Rhythm Logic is expected to tour later this year.

Twenty-Two PRODUCER: DJ DMD

Elektra 62428

This album's voluminous display of the many shades of funk and keen maverick sensibility stem from DJ DMD's vision and hands-on approach. He's a rare breed, equally skilled on the turntables, mixing board, and the mike and blessed with a deep well of musical imagination. All of this lends "Twenty-Two" a rare consistency and weight and the hitmaking appeal that results when music captures a current trend and moves it in interesting direct tions. Southern battle rhymes like "Makin" Moves" give way to the surprise of the agile spoken-word cut "Epitaph" by Momo, a screed aimed at fake MCs, which leads, in turn, into "Landmines," an "official" battle rhyme that shows the world that DMD's Inner Soul Records clique can rap. It's not about gangstas or playas but rocking the mike. Crew member and Inner Soul artist Boonie Loc flashes freestyle gifts on his self-titled track, while "When You Come Home" settles down for a sober dedication to jailed homies and "Go Back Home" takes up the case for guys tired of being played by the ladies.

VARIOUS ARTISTS Original Motion Picture Soundtrack Turf Stories

Ruthless/Epic 69836

This soundtrack so effectively plays up hip-hop's talent for stacking luridly cinematic images that it could carry the upcoming feature movie's box office by itself, even if that movie just banged out a visual panorama to the set's dread beats. A squadron of gifted up-and-comers, plus names like DMX, Layzie Bone, and Too $hort, collaborate with Keytek & CnH for Waveform 7 Entertainment (who produce most of the set) to spin out vivid turf stories-complete with the emotion and details of character motivation. Lyrically, they're tinkering with the border between pulp fiction and stark reality. Musically, they're also playing it two ways-ruff'n' smoove—weaving dense, intricate textures by layering plenty of lush male and female harmonies into the MCs' urban-urgent flows. These 19 pictorial tracks play like an extended single, but DMX deserves a special shout-out for his dynamic bebop cadences on "Ryde Or Die."

► CHICK COREA & ORIGIN

Stretch/Concord 9023

Chick Corea has entered into an exceptionally prolific stage in his career, appearing on nine discs in the past 21/2 years. 'Change" is, in fact, the first studio album from Origin, as both the group's debut and its CD boxed set were live recordings. As such, it is Corea's first project to solely feature material written with these particular musicians in mind. Recorded in the pianist/composer's living room, "Change has a pleasingly lush, organic feel that fea-tures the group's intuitive interplay over the individual sound of any one player. The musicians weave delicately within Corea's evocative compositions, whose shifting dynamics conjure up a host of colorful images, Close your eyes, and the music will reflect a lifetime of experiences while opening up a world of new possibilities.

SPOTLIGHT

ANDREAS SCHOLL: HEROES Orchestra Of The Age Of Enlightenment, Sir Roger Norrington

Decca 466 196

Often specializing in the same repertoire that the famous castratos sang back in the day, today's crop of operatic countertenors has become some-thing of a media sensation. Young German Andreas Scholl leads the field in terms of vocal acuity (breathtakingly high but still masculine), and his heartthrob looks don't hurt the cause. Decca poached Scholl from Harmonia Mundi after hearing him intone Handel's liquid "Ombrai Mai Fu," although the latter company beat the major to the punch earlier this year by featuring the tune on his indie swan song. The Harmonia Mundi disc, with the Academy Of Ancient Music-Berlin, mixes Handel arias with arrestingly played orchestral materi al. The new, all-vocal Decca set juxta-poses Handel—including "Ombrai Mai Fu"—with arias by Gluck, Hasse, and Mozart. Perhaps the British forces here aren't quite as spirited in support as the German group is on the Harmonia Mundi disc, but Scholl's pearly tone shines through in any

IBRAHIM FERRER Buena Vista Social Club Presents Ibrahim

World Circuit/Nonesuch 79532

The Buena Vista Social Club ushered in a heightened awareness of traditional Cuban music beyond its borders—and an era of good feelings between the musicians of the beleaguered island and admiring artists throughout the globe. The latest repercussion of the Buena Vista phenome non—which has already yielded im-pressive albums by members Compay Segundo and Barbarito Torres-is veteran singer Ibrahim Ferrer's delightful solo debut. A vocalist of immense gifts as both an improviser and a soulful purveyor of Cuban folklore, Ferrer brings grace, wisdom, and humor to the craft. With a band of veterans that includes other members of the Buena Vista entourage—not to mention its producer and sometime guitarist, Ry Cooder—Ferrer shines on Ernesto Duarte's classic bolero "Como Fue"; "Nuestra Ultima Cita," a song popularized in the '60s by Ferrer compatriots Los Zafiros; and two sons by genre master Arsenio Rodríguez: "Bruca Manigúa" and "Mamí Me Gustó." With its inherent quality as collateral, and with imminent exposure from a Buena Vista documentary, this project should net Ferrer the ample turns to the smooth and jazzy "I'm A Vessel" without missing a beat. "Standing On Your Word" is a power-packed ballad with all the makings of a classic-to-be, while "Let Everything That Hath Breath" puts a high-energy spin to a strong lyric of praise and worship, Contemporary enough to stay well-connected to the culture, the Chicago Mass Choir continues to celebrate—better than just about anyone—the timelessness of traditional gospel.

CLASSICAL

BERNARD HERRMANN

Jason And The Argonauts

PRODUCER: Douglass Fake Intrada 7083

Bernard Herrmann was sneaky. He introduced millions of unsuspecting moviegoers to avant-garde music via his bold scores to hit films by Alfred Hitchcock, among others. Herrmann's best-known scores ("Psycho," "Vertigo") have drawn increasing attention of late, with great samplers by the likes of Esa-Pekka Salonen. Here, though, is a premiere recording of the full score to the 1963 mythological adventure "Jason And The Argonauts." Herrmann created a suitably adventurous score for the flick, as the alternately foreboding and frenzied tones of a string-less, percussion-heavy orchestra conjure up a host of hair-raising images without any need for visual effects. Still, this music works on disc because it gets a tenacious performance by the Sinfonia of London under Bruce Broughton, as well as a fear-somely visceral recording. Distributed in the U.S. by

COUNTRY

BRAD PAISLEY

Who Needs Pictures

Arista/Nashville 18871

Brad Paisley has been touted for a while as the latest blue-chip prospect from the burgeoning Nashville class of '99. The touts were right. Paisley can do it all write, sing, pick guitar, and take command of a stage. He's an uncommonly good songwriter, one who can transcend the expected ballads and uptempo numbers. Paisley can inject a song with wit and humor—something that is done infrequently and not always well in country music. For example, "Me Neither" is a dry, tongue-in-check look at rejection in a dance hall, "Long Sermon" is about the discomforts suffered by two young would-be-fishermen waiting out a long Sundaymorning sermon, and "Sleepin' On the Foldout" is a modern version of sleeping in the doghouse.

CHALEE TENNISON

The sound that the late Tammy Wynette made famous-the teardrop and the sound of heartache in the voice-comes along infrequently in country, but Chalee Tennison's got it. With Wynette, she shares the sense of brayado in the face of tragedy that's shown perfectly here in "Someone Else's Turn To Cry," which Tennison co-wrote. Other songs here also explore the tenuous male-female tightrope of domestic life. Some of the song titles tell it: "I Let Him Get Away With It," "Handful Of Water" (referring to his lack of commitment), "Just Because She Lives

LATIN

PRODUCER: Kike Santa

Ariola/BMG Latin 66275

Pleasant sophomore effort on Ariola from smooth crooning baritone from Mexico formerly known as Cristian follows the familiar romantic ballad sound successfully initiated by the handsome vocalist in the early '90s. Producer Kike Santander's first full-length production aims straight for the middle, lyrically and musically, which ensures commercial success at radio and retail with winning entries such as the hit leadoff title track and potential follow-up love songs, including "Vivir Sin Tí" and "Angel." But several like-minded slow numbers dull somewhat the sonic edge of a 10-song set whose lone uptempo pop/dance track, "Más Y Más," contains a tinge of rock—a musical direction Castro reportedly wants to aim for on his next

CONTEMPORARY CHRISTIAN

SATELLITE SOUL

Great Big Universe

Ardent/ForeFront 5230

This three-man rock outfit from Kansas creates roots rock that's as expansive as a field of wheat and as fresh as prairie wind. Its debut album received positive notice and this finely crafted sophomore disc ful-fills that promise with earthy, honest vocal performances intertwined with harmonica. fiddle, dulcimer, and guitar. "Broken Again" is a potent expression of faith;
"Love Is All We Own" is ripe with images of the group's home state. All lyrically strong, the songs on "Great Big Universe" are made intriguing by the charm in Tim Suttle's voice. Other standout cuts include the title track, "I Am Not Leaving Now," "These Fields," and "Poor Reflection." An album not to be missed by one of the best young bands on the scene today.

CHRISTAFARI

WordSound&Power

PRODUCER: Mark Mohi Lion Of Zion 6510

In 1997, pioneering Christian reggae band Christafari came to a crossroads, with two factions looking to continue down different musical paths. As a result, several members, including lead vocalist Erik Sundin and bassist/songwriter Johnny Guerrero, exited to form Temple Yard. Christafari founder Mark Mohr (aka Tansoback) and his wife, Vanessa, recruited a new band, started a new label (Lion of Zion), and began working on this Christa fari record. The result is an ambitious, 24cut disc that finds Mark Mohr taking over lead vocals. As a songwriter and ordained pastor, Mohr draws heavily from the Bible and effectively merges Scripture with his own keen observations. Musically, the project combines contemporary dancehall reggae with traditional elements. Highlights include the gently moving "Why You Ago Look," "Love Of My Life," and "Blood And Fire." Fans will delight in knowing that, in its 10th year, Christafari remains strong as ever.

NEW AGE

★ DJAM KARET

Live At The Orion

PRODUCER: none listed Cuneiform/RUNE 119

Progressive music hasn't died, it's just gone way underground. And one of the groups lighting the torch through its tunnels is Djam Karet. Adopting its name from a Balinese phrase about "stretching time." this is a Southern California quartet that can tear through ricochet polyrhythmic grooves, complex structures, and pyrotechnic solos as death defyingly as King Crimson on a particularly spired day. The twin guitars of Gale Ellett and Mike Henderson rip and morph with sonic abandon, coursing through the rhythmic triangulations of drummer Chuck Oken Jr. and bassist Henry J. Osborne. Drawing upon music that spans its 15 years together, Djam Karet is never less than exhilarating in its virtuoso interplay, while never succumbing to jam band histrionics. While many of the group's contemporaries moved into new age ambiences and smooth jazz ministrations. Djam Karet's live, in-studio disc reveals another path progressive music could follow. VITAL REISSUES®

VLADIMIR HOROWITZ

At The Met

ORIGINAL PRODUCER: John Pfieffer REISSUE PRODUCER: Jon Samuels

RCA Red Seal 63314

Recorded at New York's Metropolitan Opera house in 1981, Vladimir Horowitz's "At The Met" is one of the legendary pianist's great albums, now restored in fine fashion to CD in RCA's new "High Performance" series. The recital starts with a glittering set of Scarlatti sonatas and goes on to include Chopin's Ballade No. 4 and "L' Adieu" Waltz, as well as Rachmaninoff's Prelude Op. 23 No. 5. The highlight here, though, is Liszt's second Ballade, which probably hasn't been performed with such grand fire since the composer played it himself. This title will surely be the fastest moving in the "High Performance" series, although as an original digital recording, it gains less from the 24/96 remastering process than the other, vintage analog entries. Raymond Lewenthal's Alkan/Liszt album is a stunner that benefits from the warmer sound, as does Erich Leinsdorf's fine Boston Symphony disc of Bartók and Kodály. But the true "High Performance" find is the sonically heightened Jean Martinon/Chicago Symphony feature from 1968, which juxtaposes the violently beautiful sonorities of Bartók's "Miraculous Mandarin" and Varèse's "Arcana" with the pure euphony of Hindemith's ballet suite "Nobilissma Visione." Here's hoping that the "High Performance" process continues apace.

► SUGAR RAY Someday (4:02)

PRODUCER: David Kahne WRITERS: Sugar Ray, David Kahne

PUBLISHERS: Warner-Chappell/WB Music/See Squared

Lava/Atlantic 8888 (CD promo)

"Every Morning," which peaked at No. 3 on The Billboard Hot 100, was an allimportant record for Southern California's Sugar Ray, dismissing suspicions that "Fly" might be Mark McGrath and the boys' only top 40 hit. "Someday" is certain to keep the momentum building, given its breezy melody, memorable guitar licks, and a maddeningly catchy chorus. McGrath, as always, sounds relaxed and loose, amid a lyrical theme about looking back on lost love. Fans of the band will instantly recognize the telltale instrumental sounds of the five guys, but the song is still unique enough to win over those who might remain unconvinced. Despite the amusing title of current album "14:59." there's no doubt that this one's going to keep the clock ticking forward.

► THE GOO GOO DOLLS Black Balloon (Radio

PRODUCERS: Rob Cavalio, the Goo Goo Dolls

WRITER: J. Rzeznik
PUBLISHERS: Corner of Clark and Kent Music/EMI Virgin Songs, BMI

Columbia 42158 (CD promo)

The Goo Goo Dolls follow smash hits "Iris" and "Slide" with a track that's readily modeled after the midtempo pop/rock stylings they've mastered since "Name" in 1996. Everything about "Black Balloon" sells, from its sing-along chorus and use of terse strings to a dramatic break right before the final choruses. Lead singer/ songwriter John Rzeznik has become a master of creating music that taps into the mind-set of top 40 audiences, who likely find an empathetic friend in his heartfelt vocals. Granted, this is nothing new from the Goos, but it should comfortably sustain their current album, "Dizzy Up The Girl," through the summer months

★ JOEY McINTYRE I Love You Came Too Late

WRITERS: E. Foster White, M. Bassie

PUBLISHERS: Zomba Enterprises/4W Music, ASCAP; Rid dim Kingdom/Zomba Enterprises, BMI

C2 Records (CD promo)

Former New Kid On The Block Joey McIntyre flew right into the top 10 with his debut solo single, the glossy ballad "Stay The Same." Can lightning strike twice? Given the success of fellow New Kid Jordan Knight's uptempo "Give It To You," there's no reason to believe that radio won't again honor the singer/songwriter with another shot, particularly given the zeal of "I Love You Came Too Late." Production is full to the brim with vim and optimism, thanks to a driving beat, fruitful harmonies, a marvelous vocal from McIntyre, and a hook that's a big checkmark on today's pop scorecard This bubbly song sounds like a smash, deserving across-the-board support from mainstream top 40. It would be nice to see McIntyre gain further notoriety, given the drought of non-R&B solo male artists over the past few years. Why should labelmate Ricky Martin have all the fun?

THE CRANBERRIES Animal Instinct (3:31)

PRODUCERS: the Cranberries, Benedict Fenne WRITERS: D. O'Riordan, M. Hogan PUBLISHER: not listed

Island 1015 (CD promo)

While the Cranberries' new album, "Bury The Hatchet," is already certified gold, the Irish outfit has yet to celebrate a return to top 40 favor along the lines of its 1993 smash "Linger" and '94's "Dreams.

The pop plate is full in this credible midtempo track, which still has enough grit to keep modern rock from whimpering about sellout. The main course, as usual, is lead Dolores O'Riordan's layered vocals, with harmonies accessorizing almost every line. Melodically, the hook is in place, and instrumentation keeps the song chugging along at a pleasing clip, often hinting at classic Cure. All in all, this palatable single has a shot to return this world-class band to full glory.

★ TINA MOORE Wreck Yo Body (4:08)

PRODUCER: not listed WRITER: not listed PUBLISHER: not listed

Musicmind Records (CD promo)
Tina Moore, whose 1995 debut was released on the now-defunct Scotti Brothers label, has the vocal command of Whitney Houston, the range of Kelly Price, and the poise and attitude of up-and-coming R&B diva Deborah Cox. The sexually charged "Wreck Yo Body" is an excellent vehicle to showcase the loose, flexible singing of this major talent, with a perfectly suited collection of beats, snaps, and instrumental sizzles alongside to keep the ride fun. With a proper marketing push, this record could break Moore wide open, making her ready for the high ranks of the genre. She's already had success in the U.K. with a Steve "Silk" Hurley remix of "Never Gonna Let You Go," while Keith Sweat contributed to another song on her upcoming album, "In My Vibe." Now, it's time for the Milwaukee native to shine on her home turf. Search this baby out.

► MARK WILLS She's In Love (3:59)

PRODUCERS: Carson Chamberlain, Keith Stegal WRITERS: K. Stegall, D. Hill

PUBLISHERS: EMI Tower Street Music/Little Cayman. BMI; If Dreams Had Wings Music, ASCAP.

Mercury 240 (CD promo)

Strong singles like "Don't Laugh At Me" and "Wish You Were Here" boosted Mark Wills' status as one of country music's most talented young male artists and helped him net the top new male vocalist trophy at last month's Academy of Country Music Awards. This pretty ballad should help further his career momentum. Penned by Mercury's Keith Stegall and veteran pop tunesmith Dan Hill (who is forging a new career chapter as a hit country writer), the song covers emotional territory that has always been fertile soil for country songwriters—letting go of an old flame when he or she has obviously found someone new. The topic gets tender treatment, and Wills' sensitive rendering of the lyric gives the song additional emo-tional impact. It's another fine record from a young man who is making a habit of delivering the goods.

★ NEAL MCCOY The Girls Of Summer (3:05)

PRODUCER: Kyle Lehning

WRITERS: B. Carmichael, R. Boudreaux PUBLISHERS: Ocean Bound/Ensign Music/Mike Curb Music/That's a Smash Music, BMI

Atlantic 8964 (CD promo)

Leave it to Neal McCoy to serve up the perfect fun, frisky, summertime radio hit. This is the second single from his current Atlantic disc, "Life Of The Party," and it's just the kind of rollicking uptempo tune that has found favor with both McCoy's fan base and country radio programmers on past outings. It leads off with a infectious guitar and fiddle intro before Mc-Coy's fun-loving vocals kick in and start the party. Few artists can convey a sense of fun on record the way McCoy can. He sounds as if he's bringing the sunshine and revelry right into the listener's home or car. The lyric is pretty lightweight on this outing, but this is meant to be musical fun. Country programmers should embrace it, and as everyone heads into the sunshine season, this is one of the songs that can set the mood.

PLANET CORE Duel Of The Fates (4:02)

REMIXERS: Cameron Lasswell, John Leftwich GlassNote 5010 (CD promo)

With the country currently engulfed in the blaze of fury that is "Star Wars: Episode I-The Phantom Menace," it was only a matter of time until somebody came along with a club-drenched version of the movie's theme, the John Williams-composed "Duel Of The Fates." But just because "The Phantom Menace" is fast on its way to becoming one of the most-talked-about films of the summer doesn't mean that the same fate will befall either of these remixed singles. For "Star Wars Theme," Interstellar Force (aka producer Ralph Sall) has decided to eschew the current film's main theme and instead revisit the 20year-old theme of the original "Star Wars." Unlike Meco's disco rendition in the '70s, the result here is dismal, to say the least. Not even remixer Todd Terry is able to save the day. Fortunately, the scenario is quite different for Planet Core's "Duel Of The Fates." In staying with the times, producers Stephen Singer and Sherman Heinig have concocted a keyboard-fueled, beat-intense operatic-infused journey that is similar in feel to Robert Miles' global crossover hit "Children." This has the power to Dance-leaning stations that have seen success with Rockell and Corona-and with tracks having similar classic freestyle roots-are likely to be all over the spirited, well-produced "There Goes Your Heart." Led by New Yorker Caprice, it naturally features plenty of remixes seven in all (mastered by Paradigm)-to make it work at any top 40 station looking to hype its tempo. Both the chorus hook and Caprice's vocal are far and above the average indy-label freestyle offerings; this is quality stuff. With Latin-spiced music igniting the airwaves, it will he interesting to see whether stations outside of the most prominent urban pockets of the U.S. will try a spin or two. In any case, New York, Los Angeles, and Miami: It's up to you to give this one its opening props.

ROCK TRACKS

PRODUCER: Ed Roland WRITER: E. Roland

Atlantic 8889 (CD promo)

After its stunning 15-week run at the top of Mainstream Rock Tracks with "Heavy," Collective Soul issues yet another signature midtempo chugger with the moxie to keep its name in lights. "No More, No Less" is typical of the quintet's radiofriendly singles: ably written and pro-duced by lead Ed Roland, with a chorus hook as instant as getting wet in the rain and guitar lines throughout that keep you interested in every note that follows. What more to say? These guys make it sound easy and have worked hard to fill their albums with an ideal blend of catchy and cool. Play it, and the masses will love you for it.

► THE GUFS Stuck (3:21)

PRODUCER: Arnold Lanni

WRITERS: G. Ktalj, M. Dawle, A. Lanni PUBLISHERS: EMI April Music/Red Sub Music, ASCAP: Lanni Tunes, SOCAN

Lava/Atlantic 8948 (CD promo)

Two camps have emerged on the modern rock frontier: the deadly serious, slick hard-rock bands and the self-effacing, purposefully goofy, Beck-like alterna-acts. Pitching a tent somewhere in between are the Gufs, who check in with an immediately singable rock track that's not ironic, affected, or otherwise contrived. The immediate sonic associations are Sebadoh and Soul Asylum: laid-back, accessible rock bands not afraid to bite into a thick bass groove and spread the old-fashioned guitar licks like icing. The production is skilled, with reverb-y vocals and a grand contrast between the sparse, percussive bridge and the full-band choruses. And while the front man's voice verges at times on glam-rock nasal, he also allows an endearing crack at just the right moments and tones down the attitude to fit the verses. An admirably delicate balance has been struck here, but more important, this song sticks with you. Radio should ink this one in for the summer.

BLACK CROWES Go Faster (4:02)

PRODUCER: Kevin Shirley WRITERS: C. Robinson, R. Robinson
PUBLISHER: Warner-Tamerlane Publishing, BMI

Columbia 42158 (CD promo)

The Crowes have never been big on musical surprises, and they're not about to change their tune now. But while "Go Faster" follows the band's tried-and-true Southern rock formula, two elements set this track apart: speed and double-entendre. The title calls for a galloping pace, and this track charges to the finish line, leaving the harmonica player gasping, the drummer spazzing, and the audience no time to get bored. The "gotcha movin'" and "keep it rollin'" sing-alongs and some quick chord changes in the refrain all contribute to the pace here, and Chris Robinson's shrieks and scats are given an appropriate and exciting context as the song gets quicker toward the end. The doubleentendre is icing on the cake—is the man discussing a pickup truck or a quick roll in the hay? "You can't stop or I might pass ya/If you slow down I will outlast ya/ . Can you make this thing go faster?" Sure, it's not Shakespeare, but it's fun.

JUMP, LITTLE CHILDREN Cathedrals (3:55)

PRODUCER: Brad Jones WRITER: J. Clifford

PUBLISHERS: Palladio Tower/PolyGram Music Nashville (ASCAP)

Atlantic 8890 (CD promo)

"Cathedrals," recorded by South Carolina's Jump, Little Children, is an intensely emotional work. A slowly strummed acoustic guitar intro sets the mood for the track. Sad violins chime in, completing the background against which vocalist Jay Clifford's lyrics will be set. He artfully describes the architecture and overwhelming impact of some of the world's most revered cathedrals. "In the cathedrals/Of New York and Rome/There is a feeling/That you should just go home," Clifford sings during the song's choruses, his voice tinged with a convincing sadness. After each verse, the violin section plays a different fill, adding color to the song. 'Cathedrals" might remind some listeners of one of Radiohead's slower numbers. Not quite lively enough for modern rock, this track might work for triple-A.

PRODUCERS: Bill Laswell, DJ Cam WRITER: J. Zawinul

PUBLISHER: Zawinul Music, BMI

Columbia 40650 (CD pron

Miles Davis' 1969 electro-ambient classic 'In A Silent Way" changed forever the way we hear not only jazz but popular music—in many ways, the man with the horn was the original electronica artist. Last year, super-producer/remixer Bill Laswell issued "Panthalassa," a justly acclaimed Columbia disc that saw him take off from Davis' multitrack tapes to create a fresh look at the artist's late-'60s and early-'70s work. Here, "In A Silent Way" is given a further remodeling via an exceedingly groovy remix by DJ Cam. It comes from the five-track disc "Panthalassa: The Remixes," which also features the knob-twiddling of Laswell, King Britt and Philip Charles, Doc Scott, and Jamie Myerson. The CD promo and vinyl versions of the album also include DJ Krush's dancefloor deconstruction of "Black Satin/On The Corner," centered on the acid-flashback hook of Davis' wah-wah trumpet line. An obvious pick for latenight mix shows and a surefire smash on college radio.

MARIE WILSON Next Time (4:24)

PRODUCER: Joe Hardy

Lava/Atlantic 8888 (CD promo)
With one spin of this pop-rocking

American debut from Aussie Marie Wilson, you'll be calling in the station troops to point out your sensational new find. Conjuring parts Amanda Marshall and classic Heart, "Next Time" features one of the most instantaneous hooks we've heard in ages, sauced up by a passionate reading from the embraceable, steelyvoiced Wilson. The lyric, co-written by the artist, also keeps listeners tuned in with its ironic twist: "Next time things will be different. baby/Next time everything is gonna change/I swear to God there will never be a next time." This is the kind of song that will add punch to top 40's current love affair with silk-and-satin tunes, but despite its sandpaper edge, it couldn't be any catchier or accessible to the masses, thanks to produc-tion props from Joe Hardy, who has worked with Jimmy Barnes, ZZ Top, and Tom Cochrane. It's no surprise that Wilson has already scored at home, where this hit garnered her two Australian Record Industry Assn. nominations—for best Australian debut single and best new artist. She was also named best new Australian artist on commercial radio at the 1998 Radio Industry Awards. Once you play this shimmering gem, you'll understand why.

Def Jam 3452 (CD promi

"Right Now," the second single from the outfit's final opus, "Out Of Business," is vintage EPMD—a super-catchy headnodder loaded with wicked metaphors, similes, and double-entendres. By their account, Erick and Parrish are "tighter than Lenny and Squiggy," have more technique than "Bruce Lee with nun-chakus," and should be "addressed as 'Mr.'—just like Bojangles." With the grainy, grimy, hardcore production provided by Erick Sermon, and the stellar lyrical content provided by Parrish Smith, we have a feeling EPMD's "Right Now" will still be cooking when now is then.

THE WILL SMITH STORY

45 minutes, $12.99

This tape is subtitled "From Philly's Finest To Hollywood Star," and it does a commendable job of tracing Smith's rising star from the earliest days to the present. Its overlying message is that Smith's unique brand of entertainment and personal style has enabled him to cross racial barriers that others have been unable to surmount. The content is pretty much par for an unauthorized biography, with excerpts from sundry awards speeches, stock television interview footage, and press clippings. Woven together they tell the story of Smith's start in the rap world as half of DJ Jazzy Jeff & the Fresh Prince, his television triumph in "The Fresh Prince of Bel-Air" with no previous acting experience, and his subsequent move into movie and music stardom. The tape also crosses into personal territory, touching on Smith's first marriage, his current. wife, Jada Pinkett, and his two sons.

A CHAMPION'S SECRETS FOR SUCCESS VT/TV

45 minutes, $19.95

"Champion's Secrets" is one of a trio of new videos featuring Olympic gold medalist and WNBA superstar Cynthia Cooper. More than the other two titles, it contains valuable lessons that extend far beyond the basketball court. Cooper, a natural leader who embraces the chance to be a role model, speaks to children and adults alike in what amounts to a substantive pep talk that challenges viewers to stay focused, better themselves, and boost their self-confidence. While she sometimes strays into the self-congratulatory camp, Cooper's success is hard-earned, and her heart clearly is in the right place. The video is marked by strong production values, with clever camera cuts and hyped-up audiovisual aids that hammer home its important motivational messages. Also in the series are "Raise Your Game" and "The Champion's Workout." Contact: 713-877-1877.

CARDIO ATHLETIC KICKBOX

Behind The Scenes Fitness 55 minutes, $24.95

Fitness buffs caught up in the "Tae Bo" craze might appreciate this alternative cardio-kickboxing workout. A high-energy routine created by fitness trainer Eversley Forte, it combines boxing punches, martial-arts kicks, and other athletic drills to tone muscles and strengthen the heart. Forte's instruction style is focused yet relaxed. He clearly enjoys introducing new takers to his routine, which is being taught at selected health clubs in the San Francisco area. In a bid not to isolate any men or women who want to join in, he offers modifications on his workout for low-, moderateand high-impact intensity. Contact: 408-

MARK TWAIN TONIGHT!

90 minutes, $24.95

More than 30 years later, Hal Holbrook's one-man show "Mark Twain Tonight!," which CBS aired in March 1967, is still the antidote for everything that's wrong with television. It's exquisitely written and acted—Holbrook nails Twain in dress and manner-and the concept of the humorist, at age 70, remarking on American society is exceedingly clever. Holbrook as Twain provides stinging commentary on everything from politics to religion to patriotism. This special has been cataloged as one of the small screen's highest moments and is available for the first time on video. As ownable entertainment goes, it is one of those rare programs from which viewers truly can glean something new every time they watch it. Now that three decades have passed since its original airing, it stands not only as a tribute to Twain, but to Holbrook's talent as well. Contact: 732-229-2343.

GARDENS OF THE CARIBBEAN

58 minutes, $19.98 One of a host of beautifully filmed new programs from the Royal Horticultural Society, this title touches down in the balmy Caribbean to reveal some of the world's most vibrant colored blossoms. While the flowers alone are enough to draw armchair travelers—particularly those in the lush Andromeda Gardens of Barbados-the program also pays tribute to several gardens of the vegetable variety and examines some of the exotic wildlife that inhabits the rain forests of Trinidad. As a "Lifestyles Of The Rich And Famous"-style treat, viewers also get a modern-day tour of Golden Eve, the Jamaican home of the late Ian Fleming. "Gardens Of The Caribbean" is available as a single title or packaged in a boxed set with tapes examining the gardens of South Africa and Cornwall.

MAKING AND MARKETING MUSIC: THE MUSICIAN'S GUIDE TO FINANCING, DISTRIBUTING, AND PROMOTING ALBUMS By Jodi Summers

$18.95; 229 pages

Rather than examine the myriad nooks and crannies of the music business from every angle—as many recent books have tried to do—"Making And Marketing Music" smartly limits the field of discussion to the concerns of aspiring recording artists.

In doing this, Jodi Summers (also the author of "The Interactive Music Handbook") discusses how to land record deals with major and indie labels, raising money for recording projects, the various nuances of studio work, the use of home studios, collecting royalties, marketing and promotion, and the role of the Internet, among other topics. And although Summers' prose is occasionally tarnished by sloppy editing, she presents her advice in a hip manner that should appeal to aspiring rockers.

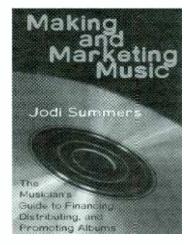

Summers includes interviews with an array of contemporary pop musicians and industry insiders, another attribute that distinguishes "Making And Marketing Music" from so many run-of-the-mill music business books. Artists offering revealing anecdotes about their careers include guitarist Eddie Van Halen, guitarist Kirk Hammett and drummer Lars Ulrich of Metallica, folk/punk impresario Ani DiFranco, and metal superstar Rob Zombie. The industry types include indie publicist Mitch Schneider, Virgin Records publicity manager Laura Cohen, attorney Donald Passman, and N2K chairman Larry Rosen.

Sometimes, the interviews come in extended question-andanswer format. And while a few Q&As stick out like sore thumbs, most complement the chapters in which they appear. For instance, in the Zombie Q&A that concludes the chapter "Going The Indie Route," the monstermind discusses starting his own label, Zombie A Go-Go Records, which he says was intended to be brand-specific-"so that you could be a fan of the label," as well as its artists.

The book's key chapter, "Making A Record," will appeal especially to up-and-coming artists. Although no audio pro, Summers does offer some insight into the whole studio process as she covers such topics as drum sounds, recording vocals, and choosing a studio. Another interesting chapter, "Recording In The Comfort Of Your Home," includes an interview with producer Steve Addabbo, in which he points to the revolutionary technology of the ubiquitous ADAT and Tascam digital multitrack recorders. The chapter also features discussion of today's favorite musical "instrument": the sampler.

Particularly apropos is Summers' explanation of how the rock act Garbage got clearance for the sampled parts of a Pretenders tune in its tribute to the group, "Special." Garbage siren Shirley Manson sought out lead Pretender Chrissie Hynde, who replied to Manson with a note stating: "I, Chrissie Hynde, hereby allow the band Garbage to sample my songs, my voice, and indeed my very ass." The way Garbage drummer/producer Butch Vig sees it, this kind of clearance is ideal: "Musicians should be able to call up musicians and either get their blessings or not."

After an artist finishes an album, marketing and promotion should help the cause, and Summers does a good job of explaining how sharp publicity can benefit a recording, referencing a campaign conducted for Aerosmith by the Mitch Schneider Organization. The company contacted Matt Groening, creator of "The Simpsons," to suggest that the song "Fine" be worked into the animated show. But Schneider's firm got more than it bargained for-Groening put an animated version of Aerosmith right in the show. Of course, most "baby bands" (the type of groups that would most benefit from this book) don't have the cachet for such large-scale exposure. But fear not, indie rockers: Many PR firms specialize in zine campaigns.

Of all media, it's the Internet that is having the most profound impact on music publicity and marketing. Summers interviews Internet advocates like Marc Geiger, CEO/chairman of ARTISTdirect and the Ultimate Band List, who explains how a company can access an artist's fan base via the Web. "If I can get the E-mail addresses of 40 percent of the people who bought the last Black Crowes record," he says, "I can have [guitarist] Chris Robinson do a 50K video interview that I can download to everybody.'

The Internet is shifting paradigms for both the making and marketing of music, a fact that helpful books like this will increasingly show.

OUR DUMB CENTURY By the editors of The Onion Read by various readers Harper Audio

90 minutes (abridged), $12 ISBN 0-694-52199-X

For those who've had enough of serious, pompous retrospectives of the 20th century, this audio will be a welcome laugh. The Onion is a humor magazine of social satire based in Madison, Wis. Here, its editors present an on-target parody of the major events of the century through fictional speeches, radio broadcasts, and news reels. A news report of the Scopes Monkey trial reveals Clarence Darrow's surprise witness: an intelligent ape from the future named Cornelius (of "Planet Of The Apes" fame), A Depression-era bank tries to cheer up customers by promising a free toaster to anyone who loses his life savings. After completing his historic flight, Charles Lindbergh signs an endorsement deal for a supposed miracle elixir (complete with an authentic-sounding radio commercial). The crackling sound of the supposedly vintage broadcasts and the amazingly accurate voice impersonations of historic figures make this comic spin on history a special treat.

Ex-Teen Star Tracie Spencer Cultivates New Style On Capitol Set

mers would get it immediately follow-

David Linton, Capitol's senior VP of

R&B promotion and marketing.

NEW YORK-Absent from the recording scene since her second album, 1990's "Make The Difference" which yielded "This House" and four other hits-a more Tracie mature Spencer finally returns with "Tracie," which Capitol releases June 29.

The album, produced by the team of Soulshock & Karlin, features seven songs co-written by Spencer, a former teen sensation who is now 22. "Tracie" also is the first release from Capitol's newly reactivated black music department and is being hailed by the label accordingly.

For Spencer, the album caps an extended period of personal development, prompted by her initial success and a move to L.A. from her Waterloo, Iowa, roots.

"I've grown up a lot and gone through a lot of changes since the last album" says Spencer. "I went home and became a normal teenagerbeing around my peers, dating, going to the prom, and finding out who I really was. It was a wonderful transformation, because I'd been performing my whole life and needed to find the direction I wanted to go in.

Indeed, Spencer began singing at age 3 and, after appearing on "Star Search" in 1986, landed an audition with Capitol. Her self-titled debut album, containing the hits "Symptoms Of True Love" and John Lennon's "Imagine," came two years later.

"It was pretty stressful for me, wondering if people would care if I made another album," continues Spencer, referring to a post-"Make The Difference" panic. "So I moved to L.A. and became independent at 17because when you're around your family, you depend on everybody to take care of you. And it's such a difficult life being an entertainer that you don't want to be handicapped by letting that happen.

L.A., of course, is also where Capiwith me, and created

SPENCER

Spencer says the set shows little relation to her previous efforts. "I wanted to do edgier hip-hop and something very fun, but with ballads at the same time," she says. "The last album dealt with the homeless issue with 'This House,' and the first had 'Imagine.' Now I'm at the point where I don't want to be too serious—even though some of the songs deal with relationships that every boy and girl goes through. But I laugh and don't take it too seriously and am writing with other young up-and-coming Spencer, a Southpaw Entertainment management client and ASCAP writer, collaborated with Tamara Savage, along with Soulshock & Karlin, on the album's "If You Wanna Get Down" and also called on Heavyn Lumpkin, who co-wrote the album's first single, "It's All About You (Not About Me)," with the production team. Singer/songwriter Andrea Martin contributed "Still In My Heart," and Diane Warren gladly submitted "Nothing Broken But My Heart" when solicited by Spencer.

The single was shipped to R&B formats in early May so program-tol is headquartered. "In order to get the new album going, I had to be surrounded by the music and the people; I put a lot of time and energy into getting it right. The marriage between me and Soulshock & Karlin is perfect because they didn't know my past and didn't want to know—they came in blind, hung out

gotten a lot of requests from people

"We're excited because the record is receiving overwhelming success and acceptance at radio," he says, adding that it's being shipped to crossover stations. This issue, the song is No. 54 on the Hot R&B Singles and Tracks chart. "It's a more mature Tracie that's definitely going to reach the adult audience," says Michelle Campbell, music director at WBLS in New York. "I love the single, and we've who don't know who it is at first and are nicely surprised—just as I was."

A "very exciting, cutting-edge video" has been shot with director Francis Lawrence, says Linton. Capitol is staging "a full-fledged frontal media attack" starting with R&Bslanted trades and proceeding to the consumer press. Spencer, who is booked by William Morris, is slated to perform at radio promotional dates.

'The key is to get her in front of crowds so people can feel the enormity of her talent," says Linton, adding that talent agencies have also expressed interest in Spencer based on her photogenic looks. "But once she gets out, people will see that she's more than just a pretty face.

Violet Brown, urban music director for the Wherehouse music chain, predicts a re-emergence for Spencer on par with that of Shanice. "Tracie's just a knockout and has the personality to follow it up," she says. "She's been gone awhile, but her voice is better than ever, and the songs are up-to-date."

Spencer's name, Linton says, is "almost synonymous with Capitol," making her "the foundation upon which we can rebuild the genre

Two Industry Confabs Mark Black Music Month; Linton Gets IAAAM's Medlin Award

HE BUSINESS OF MUSIC: As Black Music Month slides into its 20th anniversary, 'tis the season for getting together and networking—on both coasts. The West Coast's third annual Urban Focus Music Conference is set for June 26-27. The premier sponsor of the eventstaged at Hollywood's Musicians Institute—is L.A. R&B/hip-hop outlet KKBT. Additional sponsors include BMI, ASCAP, and EMI Music Publishing.

The schedule features a broad range of panels, workshops, and mentoring sessions designed to give current and aspiring industry players a leg up on aspects of and opportunities in the R&B music business—from "get-ting through the door" to marketing, distribution, publishing, and creating productive Internet relationships. Of particular note, according to Urban Focus Music Foundation (UFMF) president Marci Kenon, is the Saturday gospel panel sponsored by the Millennium Entertainment Group.

Back by popular demand are the demo listening sessions. This time around, they're presented in three versions: one on one (in which registrants get individual feedback from an executive); group (one executive listens to a maximum of 50 demos played anonymously); and panel-style (three executives offer opinions on randomly selected songs).

Confirmed guests include Angelia Bibbs-Sanders, executive director of the L.A. branch of the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences; MCA senior director of urban A&R Jeff Redd; UFMF board member and EMI Music VP of creative Big Jon; Millennium VP Michelle S. Duffie; and Hollywood Records senior VP of urban A&R Byron Phillips.

The City of Dreams (COD) seminar, to be held June 26-28 at New York's Digital Sandbox, expands on UFMF's premise, presenting a format that marries urban music with the culturally interconnected fashion and magazine publishing industries.

This second annual affair—the brainchild of CEO Rameek Jackson and president Brian Hellwig-presents a series of daytime panels (focusing on legal, retail, licensing, and distribution issues) and evening events (including a new artist showcase). Participants include Bad Boy Entertainment, Loud Records, Roc-A-Fella Records, and Blaze magazine. Confirmed panelists include the Rap Coalition's Wendy Day, Rock-A-Fella CEO Damon Dash, Ruff Ryders CEO Chevon Dean, and KRS-One attorney Maury Winkler.

Jackson says COD is planning an L.A. offshoot set for Nov. 6-8. For more info, contact 212-391-5755.

KUDOS: David Linton, Capitol Records' senior VP of R&B promotion and marketing, is the recipient of the Joe Medlin Contributors Award, the highest honor bestowed by the International Assn. of African-American Music (IAAAM). He'll receive the award during IAAAM's "One Nation Under A Groove" celebration of Black Music Month, to be held Thursday-Saturday (10-12). The celebration is being held in conjunction with VIBE Live at Disney World. Held Saturday (12) in Pleasure Island, Fla., the awards luncheon will be hosted by Priority Records VP of urban promotion Doug Daniels.

PURE SOUL: Naperville, Ill.-based Classic World Productions delivers on its promise of "No Mergers . . . No Downsizing . . . No Artist Layoffs . . . Just Pure Classic Soul" with the Tuesday (8) release of albums by two R&B stalwarts: Ike & Tina Turner and the Manhattans Featuring Gerald Alston & Blue Lovett. The "Ike & Tina Turner Ultimate Collection" is a four-CD set featuring the duo's hits ("River Deep, Mountain High"), covers (the Beatles' "Come Together"), and live tracks ("Keep On Pushin'").

"The Manhattans Live From South Africa Featuring Gerald Alston & Blue Lovett"—the group's first live album releasecaptures a 35-year career that spans such romantic gems as "Kiss And Say Goodbye" and "Shining Star." Besides Alston and Lovett, the group features Troy May and Dave Tyson.

Caught during the group's current national tour. Alston and Lovett credit dedication, strong faith in God, fan support, and classic soul's resurgence for their ongoing success. "It seems like things are on our side at this particular time," says Lovett. "There were times when we would never hear our songs played on the air.'

Adds Alston, "Younger [artists] sampling and doing our material [including Maverick/Sire act N-Phase] brought us back to the forefront. The songs we recorded in the '60s and '70s are standards . . . they sound just as good now, telling stories people can identify with." And, chimes in Lovett, "we sing about love. And that's always going to be there."

The New 'Sounds Of Philadelphia.' Legendary label Philadelphia International has signed its first new act in more than 15 years, R&B/pop vocal group No Question. Its debut single is slated for a summer release. On hand for the occasion, standing from left, are Philadelphia International co-founder/vice chairman Leon Huff, newly appointed executive VP Chuck Gamble, co-founder/chairman Kenneth Gamble, VP Phillip Asbury, and No Question managers Kahn Jamal and Vance DeBose. Seated, from left, are No Question members Dante Massey, Nicholas Johnson, Thomas Blackwell, and Damon Core ences, and it's all still Southern," adds DMD. "None of the songs are gangsta, but they all maintain a hard edge. I put records together that reflect a balance of music and reality."

"Intro," the meditative first track, gives way to the pumped-up second track, "The Trill Connection." The title phrase-which means "too real"—was put together by U.G.K., a group popular in the South. Rounding out the set are battle rhymes, reality tunes, pleas for divine help, man-woman business, and the rerelease's first single, "25 Lighters" (out May 10), described "as a Southern feel-good song where we're subliminally telling people to do what-ever to get paid." The track "Outro" bookends "Intro," with DMD giving thanks and shout-outs to "those who've showed us love and helped us get to this point."

After releasing a record in 1992 "for a little Houston label," DMD established Inner Soul while simultaneously running a record store. His producing and rapping debut was the 1996 release "Eleven."

To bone up on the record business, he read books. "A lot of it is just instinct and common sense, and we had the determination," recalls DMD. "We knew we'd have to wear a lot of hats and make mistakes, but we had to be smart enough not to let them kill the company."

"25 Lighters," featuring local legends the late Fat Pat and Lil Keke, took off after DMD gave a copy to a DJ friend at KBXX (the Box) Houston, a key R&B/hip-hop station.

'25 Lighters' came to us from the clubs and the street, and it was our No. 1 most-requested record," says Robert Scorpio, KBXX's operations manager/PD. "We had no choice; we had to play it."

The Elektra signing came about after the Rap Coalition's Wendy Day (DMD's management consultant) and New York attorney Mike Selverne sent out feelers in winter 1998.

"DMD is emerging as one of the more original talents among the wave of 'Third Coast' artists now impacting the hip-hop scene," says Sylvia Rhone, Elektra's chairman/ CEO. "We hope to provide a platform that will create the kind of exposure that DMD and his stable of artists deserve."

DMD's national promotional tour runs until June 22 and includes visits to major retail chains in key markets.

ARTISTS & MUSIC

Roger Sanchez Ready To Let Loose His R-Senal Of Grooves

RED ALERT: On June 25, world-renowned producer/remixer/DJ Roger Sanchez will launch R-Senal Records, his independent label. Continuing where his previous label—the now-defunct Narcotic Records—left off, R-Senal will concentrate on artist development in a musical landscape that fuses together house, techno, jazz, and funk.

JUNIOR SANCHEZ

"It's all about quality," says Sanchez. "I want to release the best music and develop artists. I want R-Senal to be the bomb."

Pressed and distributed by Strictly Rhythm, the New York-based label's first release is Junior Sanchez Featuring Dajae's "B With U," which is culled from Sanchez's forthcoming EP "2morrow's Future 2day."

A divine uptempo R&B jam, "B With U" finds Junior (no relation to Roger) laying down a flawless house foundation that brings to mind such uptempo R&B jams from the '70s as South Shore Commission's "Free Man," Lenny White's "Choosing You," Ecstasy, Passion & Pain's "Ask Me," and Shalamar's "Right In The Socket."

And Dajae, who has graced many a contemporary clubland gem, including the anthemic "Brighter Days," has never sounded so vocally refined—and we mean that as a compliment. With "B With U," it appears that the Chicago-based singer has discovered the fine arts of subtlety, inflection, and nuance.

Sanchez and Dajae are touring throughout North America in support of this project. Upcoming club dates include Saturday (12) at New York's Limelight; June 25 at Toronto's Electric Circus and June 26 at Industry, also in Toronto; and July 4 at the House of Blues and July 8 at Karma, both in Chicago.

RELEASE THE PRESSURE: In April, the MCA/Universal-distributed Twisted America Records scored a No. 1 hit on the Hot Dance Music/Club Play chart with "Body" by Funky Green Dogs. Well, it appears the label may soon repeat the process with Celeda's "Be Yourself,"

by Michael Paoletta

scheduled for release Tuesday (8).

Of course, club punters in London, Paris, Miami, New York, and Chicago have been clamoring for this track since March, when test pressings of the decidedly bottom-heavy, Danny Tenaglia-produced track were delivered to select DJs.

A universal plea for individuality, "Be Yourself" is taken from the singer's debut album, "This Is It," which should be in stores July 27.

On June 22, Nervous Records will issue Charlotte's "Someday," the U.K. singer's follow-up to "Skin," which peaked at No. 1 on the Hot Dance Music/Club Play chart in February. An ever-hopeful tale of everlasting love, the Grant Mitchell-produced "Someday" finds Charlotte sounding like a cross between Mariah Carey and Toni Braxton, circa "My All" and "Un-Break My Heart," respectively—which ain't a bad merging, if ya ask us! Adding ample fuel to this ferocious fire are remixers Keith Litman and Grammy-winner David Moreles.

GO DEEP: For the past few months, 1-year-old Earthtones Recordings has been making some major noise with a slew of delicious deep-house singles, including Natural Rhythm's "The Jive EP," Pete Moss' "The Infrared EP," Adny's "Sincere, The Sky Be," and Dino & Terry's "Crowd Control EP." Today, the Huntington, Calif.-based independent is gearing up for the June 15 release of "Contrast In Nature," the debut album from Natural Rhythm.

Mixing early-Chicago-house sentimentalities ("Mantra") and rubbery disco loops ("For Real") with a splash of Basement Jaxx-styled beats ("Energized"), Natural Rhythm—made up of Orange County, Calif., DJs/producers Thomas White, Pete Williams, and Cocoe—stylishly forges ahead with an atmospheric vibeology that proudly displays its influences within the collection's ohso-cool grooves.

On Tuesday (8), Plastic City America issues Laidback Luke's "Music's Always On My Mind," which, with its deep-baked beats and diva wailings, will immediately remind many of Basement Jaxx's highly explosive "Red Alert." While the original version looks to Jaydee's "Plastic Dreams" for its meaty foundation, Terry Lee Brown Jr.'s Lexicon remix shines the light on guitar licks, Summer Fever. On the eve of the release of Donna Summer's much-anticipated album "VH1 Presents Donna Summer: Live & More—Encore!," the Epic Records artist was putting the finishing touches on one of the many remixes that will accompany her new single, the Hex Hector/Mac Quayle-produced "I Will Go With You (Con Te Patiro)." Scheduled for commercial release July 6, the single sports mixes by Warren Rigg, Welcome Productions, Rosabel, Messy Boys, Richie Santana, Trouser Enthusiasts, Club 69, and Hector. Shown in the studio, from left, are Hector, Summer, and Quayle.

Italy's Progressive Sounds Heard On BXR Label

BY MARK DEZZANI

SAN REMO, Italy—The 12-year-old Brescia-based Media Records Italy—situated in the industrial heartland of the country's northern Lombardy region—is churning out artisan club music crafted by a team of top Italian DJs on its 3-year-old imprint, BXR.

Four months ago, New York-based Empire State/EightBall Records began licensing product, on a track-by-track basis, for the U.S. from BXR's progressive catalog.

PICOTTO

Founded by Gianfranco Bortolotti and Diego Leone, who remain principal partners today, Media Records made its mark in the early '90s with a string of tech-no-etched pop hits from the 49ers, Clock, and Capella.

But since the crash in Italy's dance market in the mid-'90s, Media has focused on BXR, as well as a string of multimedia projects, including the MP3 music-streaming project the Net Juke Box, which allows the real-time mixing of music online.

Established in 1996, BXR is home to many of Italy's top underground and techno DJ/producers. The label's artist roster includes the progressive Mediterranean club stylings of Mario Piu, Ricky Le Roi, Bismark, and Gabri Fasano. Also signed to the label is DJ Saccoman, who specializes in a harder techno sound.

"We signed major DJs from different regions in Italy to produce the type of dance music that they enjoy playing at their gigs," says Mauro Picotto, a producer for the label who also has a financial share in Media.

Picotto is enjoying club success in the U.K. with the single "Lizard," which was licensed to Virgin U.K. The track has received massive play from such influential U.K. club/radio DJs as Pete Tong, Graham Gold, and Judge Jules.

Over the course of three years, BXR has nurtured its team of DJs/producers. A case in point is Gigi D'Agostino, who had a regional hit with the atmospheric trance track "Voyage" in 1997. Now, D'Agostino is enjoying success in the U.S.—both in clubs and on radio mix shows—with "Your Love," which was licensed to Tommy Boy earlier this year. (In Italy, the song was titled "Flicir")

Says D'Agostino, "Mediterranean progressive has evolved from the more ambient sound of 'Voyage' in the early days to a more techno sound with stronger rhythms and melodies. Also, some fun voice samping like on my recent 'Bla Bla Bla' single," he adds, is becoming popular.

According to Bortolotti, "Bla Bla Bla" sold 20,000 copies in Italy earlier this year. Additionally, he confirms that the single has been licensed to ZYX Records for Germany, Switzerland, and Austria.

New York-based Jellybean Recordings has secured licensing rights for the U.S. for D'Agostino's follow-up, "Cuba Libre," scheduled for release June 22.

Throughout the U.K. and much of Europe, Media Records enjoys a strong presence due to its own affiliates, including Media Records France, Media Records Benelux, and Media Records U.K. A new addition, Media Records Germany, is scheduled to open its doors July 1.

Bortolotti says that, in addition to his traditional network, he is putting more and more emphasis on the Internet and his Web site (www.mediarec. it). He says it's a great way to reach the specialist club audience.

"When the dance market cracked in Italy, radio airplay for dance music tended towards the more commercial dance/pop and house releases," Bortolotti notes. "We feel there is still a big market for progressive music even if radio stations, apart from the speciality programs, won't play it.

"We decided to develop a more experimental and underground sound and to promote it via the Internet," Bortolotti adds. "The MP3 software downloads are bringing the music world to its knees. Rather than try and ignore it, we have just adopted it for our Net Juke Box software, which we use to stream our catalog online."

fluttering flutes, filtered vocals, and Jimmy "Bo" Horne-etched beats.

Since January, Distance France has been keeping discerning club pundits immensely happy with such 12-inch singles as Alton Miller's "Sweet In The Morning," Danny Rampling's "Community Of The Spirit," Visual Tools Featuring Curtis Harman's "Keep Reachin', and King Of Tomorrow's "Let It Go," which is culled from the act's sublime album "The Beginning."

On Monday (7), the Parisian label is scheduled to release Kevin Yost's orchestral journey "If She Only Knew," complete with disco-swirled and retro-house journeys courtesy of Todd Edward and Shazz, respectively; K. Hand's "Do It," sure to please fans of Pete Heller's "Big Love," which sits atop the Hot Dance Music/Club Play chart this issue; and USG Presents African Blues' "Sunpower," a thick slab of old-fashioned house, compliments of DJ/producer Ron Trent.

Speaking of Trent, he is also responsible for "I Feel The Rhythm." Scheduled for release Tuesday (8) via Trent's own label, the King Street Sounds-distributed Prescription, the beautifully eerie "Rhythm" scores additional points for featuring the live percussion of Genoa Mungin and the remixing skills of Karl Injex and Chris Brann (aka Wamdue Pro-

Staying with Brann for one more second, Nite Grooves-also distributed by King Street Sounds—finally unleashed the much-sought-after remixes of the Ananda Project Featuring Gaelle Adisson's "Cascades Of Color" remixes June 1.

In its original version, Brann surrounded Adisson's dreamy vocals with equally dreamy synth pads and sweltering beats. For the remixes, Florida DJ Jask (we'll be keeping an eye on this talented newcomer!) has increased the track's energy, making it more of a peak houser as opposed to an early-evening jam.

Also on Nite Grooves is "Vibe PM" by Mondo Grosso. Already a staple at New York's weekly Body & Soul party, this percussion-filled track has been ferociously re-tweaked by Masters At Work (otherwise known as "Little" Louie Vega and Kenny "Dope" Gonzalez). Working alongside this duo is Latina diva India who, in signature form, injects the track with ample heat. Out Tuesday (8).

Music To Enjoy Higher Profile At Nashville Indie Film Fest

BY CHET FLIPPO

NASHVILLE—Noting the increasing interaction between Nashville's music community and the world of film, the Nashville Independent Film Festival has raised music's profile at this year's festival, scheduled for June 9-13.

Festival sponsors now include Music Row firms ASCAP, BMI, Creative Artists Agency (CAA), and Gaylord Entertainment. ASCAP, BMI, and CAA will hold workshops during the fest on various aspects of the music/film relationship.

When present executive director Michael Catalano took the reins of what was then called the Sinking Creek Film Festival two years ago, he said one of his first priorities was to nurture the ties to the Nashville music community.

"We also changed the name of the festival," he says, "to try to make it reflect all of Nashville and moved the festival off the Vanderbilt campus to get it onto the streets." Screenings are now held in the multi-screen Regal Green Hills 16 complex.

He says the fest is striving to be part of the musical community, with such recent events as the showing of "Down To Earth," a documentary film about bluegrass legend Ralph Stanley. A reception before the screening allowed filmgoers to meet Stanley and film director Herbie Smith.

"That's the kind of thing we want to do more of," Catalano says. "We want to bring the filmmaker together with the musician. I want this organization to be one of the bridges between Nashville and Hollywood.

COLLIE

I've been in both worlds all my life. We've started the process now, and we're hopeful about the possibilities."

One of the most eagerly awaited films to be screened at the upcoming fest is "I Still Miss Someone," a short featuring country artist Mark Collie, in his film debut, as Johnny Cash. Collie's portrayal of Cash in the singer's drinking and pill-popping years is intense and vivid.

"I saw that after screening 600 films," says Catalano, "and it made me sit right up."

Collie will discuss his transformation to screenwriter and actor at one of the festival's workshops, "From Songwriter To Screenwriter," on Friday (11).

Other music-oriented films include "Dill Scallion," a "mockumentary" sendup of the Nashville music scene;

Penelope Spheeris' "Decline Of Western Civilization Part 3"; and "Gary Morris And The Art Of Tretyakov," featuring Nashville country singer Morris performing a benefit for the Tretyakov Art Gallery in Moscow.

ASCAP's workshop Friday (11) will center on composing music for film. The BMI workshop on Wednesday (9) will focus on the placing of music in the new Morgan J. Freeman film "Desert Blue." The workshop follows the movie's screening.

Reissued Recordings From The Crazy Cajun Label Showcase Raw Talent

by Chet Flippo

ON THE RECORD: London-based Demon Records is releasing a historic trove of material recorded by legendary Texas producer Huey Meaux.

His Houston-based Crazy Cajun Records at one time or another was home to almost every artist of note in the Gulf Coast area, from T-Bone Walker to Delbert McClinton, from Dr. John to the Sir Douglas Quintet, and from Doug Kershaw to B.J. Thomas.

The first slate of reissues in the series of "The Crazy Cajun Recordings" includes some interesting country material, beginning with a three-CD, 65-cut set by the great Freddy Fender. "The Voice," as it's called, is loosely organized into three sections: ballads (in Spanish and English), rockers (in English), and country hits (not all necessarily his) sung in Spanish.

One caveat: As was typical with Crazy Cajun releases, discographical information here is spotty or nonexistent, and several songs are credited to "unknown."

Information is better on "Floyd Tillman," which includes 26 songs from the eccentric Country Music Hall of Fame member's long career. The writer of such country classics as "Slipping Around," "It Makes No Difference Now," and "I Love You So Much, It Hurts," Tillman remains one of country's lesser-known pioneers, and this opens another window onto his work.

The albums devoted to Moe Bandy and Ronnie Milsap are musically rich, if short, snapshots of the early stages of two pivotal '70s country figures. Bandy was a key honky-tonk singer, and it's interesting that on his early Crazy Cajun efforts he included an instrumental. Milsap, who bridged country and blues and gospel, is rawer sounding in these early cuts than he later became on RCA.

Again, information about these recordings is scant. Like Meaux himself (who is in prison in Texas), the Crazy Cajun recordings were vital and raw, if uncontrollable, pieces of American musical history.

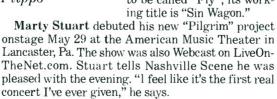

The reissues are on Demon subsidiary Edsel Records, distributed by Distribution North America.

On THE ROW: Ken Kragen becomes president/COO of Nashville-based Dreamcatcher Artist Management Inc. Dreamcatcher also names Ted Greene VP and Renee Behrman director of radio/media relations. The artist roster includes Kenny Rogers and Diamond Rio. Rogers' scheduled May 30 Royal Albert Hall concert in London was canceled after a bomb threat.

Reba McEntire becomes spokeswoman for children's book line First Book and will unveil Reba's First Book Club Tuesday (8) in New York. Suzy Bogguss signs with Platinum Entertainment. She and husband

Doug Crider will co-produce an album due this fall.

With Peter Asher producing, Dixie Chicks have recorded the old Supremes song "You Can't Hurry Love" for the soundtrack to the new Julia Roberts movie, "Runaway Bride." The Chicks are finishing their second album, to be called "Fly"; its working title is "Sin Warrn"

Look for BR5-49 to join the Brian Setzer Orchestra's summer tour... Singer/songwriter Amy Rigby is moving from Brooklyn, N.Y., to Nashville.

YES, BUT IS IT COUNTRY? That's the natural question that comes to mind in watching a video by new DreamWorks Nashville artist Lisa Angelle. It takes her through some exciting action, including caressing and singing to a boa constrictor that is mesmerized—as is the camera operator—by Angelle's poitrine. She goes on to mud-wrestle with alligators—all the while dressed in a bodice-straining, wispy little dress. What's the name of the song? Who knows? The cassette is titled only "Watch Me!"

Warner Ready To 'Play Ball!' At Radio With David Ball Set

BY DEBORAH EVANS PRICE

NASHVILLE—"Play Ball!" has long been a favored phrase of sports enthusiasts, but Warner Bros. execs are hoping it becomes a battle cry at country radio this summer as they prepare for the July 13 release of David Ball's new album, "Play."

"I love it," J.D. Cannon, music director at WFMS Indianapolis, says of the album's title, and he's equally enthusiastic about the entire project. "I've heard the whole album, and it's just outstanding. They can pick any single they want, and we're going to play it."

Cannon is currently airing Ball's first single from the album, "Watching My Baby Not Coming Back." "It sounds great on the air," says Cannon.

The single is No. 47 on this issue's Hot Country Singles & Tracks. When Warner Bros. issued the record, it serviced a disc in the shape of a baseball. Warner Bros. director of marketing Rick Henegar says that he and his co-workers are having fun playing off the title of Ball's album and that additional tie-ins are planned.

"David is an artist is every sense of the word," says Henegar. "We're trying to focus on that and reintroduce him back into the marketplace because he's been gone for some time. He's been focusing on his music, and he's given us a great project to work with. Not only is he a strong vocalist, he's a strong songwriter."

Henegar says the label has also been reacquainting Ball with country radio on a promo tour. One radio visit was a reminder of the distinctiveness of Ball's voice, and how recognizable it is to listeners. "One of the stations we went to played a song from the new project, and before they played it, they told listeners they had an artist who was going to perform at the station, and if they could identify the artist, they could come and be part of this private performance for the station," says Henegar. "They played a track from the record, and the switchboard went crazy. Everybody knew it was David Ball. That's pow-(Continued on page 29)

erful. David has been out of the country listeners' direct sphere of influence for over two years, and they were excited to hear him."

Ball's debut album, "Thinkin' Problem," debuted July 2, 1994, and peaked at No. 6 on the Top Country Albums chart July 30, with the title cut going as high as No. 2 on the singles chart. His sophomore album, "Starlite Lounge," bowed July 13, 1996, and peaked at No. 44.

"Play" is Ball's first album in nearly three years. When asked what he's been up to during the hiatus, Ball responds, "The main thing was writing and putting the songs together. I have to get about seven tunes I feel real strong about. Once I've done that, the rest was scheduling, putting it together, and getting everybody ready to go. Then once it was done, we decided to hold it back and go out and do some promoting. It has been a while, and I felt like we needed to reintroduce ourselves to radio.

"Play" marks the first time Ball has been in the producer's seat. He produced six cuts with engineer Ben Fowler. Known for his work with Michael Peterson, among others, Fowler worked with Ball on a song he recorded a couple years ago for a Steven Seagal movie. "I thought 'This guy really gets a great sound," Ball recalls. "It has a lot of energy to it."

Loretta And Brad. Two of Nashville's finest recently teamed up for a show at New York's Town Hall. New Arista/Nashville artist Brad Paisley previewed songs from his forthcoming album, "Who Needs Pictures," and country music legend Loretta Lynn performed landmark songs from throughout her career.

The remaining songs were produced by Don Cook (Brooks & Dunn, the Mavericks, Wade Hayes). "I've always been a fan of Don Cook's. He's very, very busy," Ball says, "but we did schedule [some sessions] and cut a bunch of stuff that I thought turned out real good-kind of the Don Cook sound.'

Another first for this album was Ball using his road band in the studio. "I had always wanted to go in with my band and see what happened," he says. "This was an opportunity to do just what I wanted to do . . . It was a learning process, but I was pretty comfortable with it. You just try to find the best song and do justice to that song."

Henegar says Warner's marketing campaign includes a strong push to all country radio stations, with the album being serviced to secondary and tertiary markets, as well as Broadcast Data Systems-monitored stations. "The smaller markets out there know who David Ball is, and they play David Ball," he says. "They are going to be excited to hear this new music. I think it's essential that we impact every market in this country,"

Warner Bros. plans to tout the project via strategic advertising. In addition, the label redesigned Ball's Web site and plans Internet promotions. "Consumers will have direct access to his music and will be able to sample it in ways they haven't been able to before," he says, "and be able to purchase it online.'

Ball's video for "Watching My Baby Not Coming Back" is already garnering strong airplay on CMT and other outlets.

Henegar says point-of-purchase materials will include posters and flats, and Ball's music will be featured via listening posts and video walls.

Ball is booked by Buddy Lee Attractions, managed by Mike Robertson, and signed as a songwriter to EMI Music Nashville. In addition to performing at dance halls this summer, Ball will be opening select West Coast dates for Alabama.

REEL MUSIC: Rarely is original music for a film so embedded in the drama as is John Corigliano's with "The Red Violin." The film by François Girard (who directed "Thirty-Two Short Films About Glenn Gould") traces the fictional history of a crimson-hued violin and its various owners across three centuries and three continents, and the score is by far the story's most compelling agent. Corigliano interweaves quotes from famous violin literature throughout his score—Bach, Paganini, Gypsy tones—in addition to creating a powerful main theme. As odd scheduling dictated, Corigliano drew the score from a free-standing, 18-minute concertante piece he composed first—which is, of course, the opposite tack from the usual theatrical production, Along with being Girard's violinistic muse for the film, Joshua Bell has been the medium of this already popular concert work, "'The Red Violin' Chaconne."

"The Red Violin" opens Friday (11) in New York and Los Angeles, moving to a wider release in July. The Sony Classical soundtrack album—which includes the score and the concertante piece performed intently by Bell and London's Philharmonia under Esa-Pekka Salonen-came out in mid-May in the U.S. The disc was issued in January in the U.K. to coincide with the film's opening there, and it garnered plaudits from the likes of Gramophone and London's discerning dailies, which justly commended the score for its combination of imagination and integrity. Multimedia corporate tie-ins and all, "The Red Violin" is highly crafted theatrical music written by a serious composer—albeit one who is keen to reach out. "At a talk before the Toronto premiere, John said that he really wanted the audience to like his music," Bell says. "And that must have seemed less than purist for some people, so he was nearly lynched for saying it. But John stands up for what he believes in. And 'The Red Violin' is beautiful music, after all.'

Bell—who not only served as an instrumental body double in the film but put in a costumed cameo—has certainly been standing behind "'The Red Violin' Chaconne." He has played it around the world with various orchestras, often pairing the piece with movements from John Williams' score to "Schindler's List." Bell's June 3 concert with the Eos Ensemble in New York paired the premiere of a lengthier suite from "The Red Violin" with complementary works by Bach, Bartók, and Schnittke. Bell will also be playing a duo arrangement of themes from "The Red Violin" with pianist Simon Mulligan while on tour in June in Asia, as well as performing the orchestral "Chaconne" later this summer in Amsterdam and at Chicago's Ravinia Festival.

While "The Red Violin" is Salonen's first soundtrack, the conductor is no stranger to film music. He recorded an album of Bernard Herrmann's bold music with his Los Angeles Philharmonic for Sony, and the thrillingly played themes from such Hitchcock films as "Psycho" and "Vertigo" made for one of the best discs of 1996. He also initiated an ambitious series of "Filmharmonic" concerts in Los Angeles concentrating on newly commissioned music for films, with the orchestra performing the scores against a screen. The "Filmharmonic" evenings debuted last year with David Newman's score to "Tales From 1,001 Nights," an animated feature by Yoshitaka Amano. Scheduling difficulties with directors have delayed the series' next installment, although the project is still alive, by all reports.

Although he is a modernist by inclination, movie music isn't a sellout for Salonen. "I've always thought that an orchestra must reflect its milieu," he says. "We have recorded the music of the Mexican composer Silvestre Revueltas, and one could also say that Hollywood scores are to Los Angeles what Strauss waltzes are to Vienna. Also, conducting film music in concert is interesting because it is like psychoanalysis, in that you are tapping into the audience's visual memories. With Herrmann, some of his music comes with such powerful images that you don't need the film to see them. For 'Filmharmonic,' I thought it would be exciting to create a sort of concerto for film and music, in which the music would come first—the opposite of most movie scores. And that, of course, is something that has pleased the composers I've spoken with immensely.

FEATURE ATTRACTIONS: One of the most imaginative and musically compelling essays in the cinematic realm is violinist Gidon Kremer's "Le Cinema," his recent Teldec collection of film themes by a starry cast of composers: Milhaud, Shostakovich, Takemitsu, Nina Rota, Astor Piazzolla, Giya Kancheli-and Charlie Chaplin, with his own tune to "Modern Times." There is also Riccardo Chailly's valiant Decca anthology of Shostakovich movie music (Keeping Score, Billboard, Feb. 6). And just out is the complete version of Bernard Herrmann's fearsomely inventive score to "Jason & The Argonauts," as relayed by Bruce Broughton and the Sinfonia Of London on the Intrada label (via Albany Music Distributors in the U.S.).

Another freshly rehabilitated score is Erich Wolfgang Korngold's rethink of Mendelssohn for the 1934 Max Reinhardt flick "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Led by conductor Gerd Albrecht, it is the latest entry in CPO's complete Korngold edition. Later this summer, ECM New Series will bring out the gravely poetic "Eternity And A Day," the latest Eleni Karaindrou soundtrack to a film by Theo Angelopoulos, Due Oct. 5 is "Reel Time," a Sony Classical collection of Wynton Marsalis' film scores (beyond the New Orleans evocations of "Tune In Tomorrow," a jazz beauty from 1990). And by Halloween, Nonesuch should have Philip Glass' red-velvet score to "Dracula," as performed by the Kronos Quartet for a Universal Pictures rerelease of the 1931 Bela Lugosi classic. Wish list: A new, full version of Takemitsu's haunting score to Kurosawa's "Ran" (beyond the shortform Milan disc) and a collection of Alfred Schnittke's film themes.

N MEMORIAM: A unique combination of musician and philanthropist, Paul Sacher has died at age 93 in Basel, Switzerland. Early on, Sacher pursued a career as a conductor and educator, founding the Basel Chamber Orchestra and the Schola Basilienis Cantorum for the study of early music. After 1934, when he married the heir to the Hoffman-La Roche pharmaceutical firm (makers of Valium), Sacher became the prime patron of European modernism. He commissioned more than 200 works, including totems from Stravinsky and Bartók. A symbol of the esteem in which composers held him is "Twelve Hommages À Paul Sacher;" a two-disc ECM New Series set by cellists Patrick and Thomas Demenga that collects pieces written to honor Sacher's 70th birthday (at the suggestion of Mstislav Rostropovich). Contributors included Britten, Ginastera, Lutoslawski, Henri Dutilleux, Hans Werner Henze, Luciano Berio, Pierre Boulez, and Heinz Holliger.

Kenny Garrett Stays On The Cusp Of Jazz

THOSE WHO HAVE SEEN Kenny Garrett perform live know that the man is capable of some serious blowing. Garrett's live shows are consistently marked by intense moments of improvisation that push the boundaries of the saxophonist's compositions, earmarking him as one of the music's most dynamic and adventurous players.

By contrast, those following the saxophonist's studio output have witnessed the progression of Kenny Garrett the composer. Garrett could, no doubt, record album after album of intense, flurry-of-notes bop with much critical and commercial success. Instead, he has chosen to concentrate on composing songs that he hopes will help nurture the next generation of jazz musicians, gracefully ushering the music into the coming decade.

After releasing 1996's "Pursuance-The Music Of John Coltrane" (Warner Bros.), Garrett made a bold statement of intent with "Songbook" (1997), a collection of alloriginal compositions that focused on his burgeoning skills as a writer. "Simply Said" (due June 22 from Warner Bros.) continues Garrett's compositional journey, focusing on recurrent themes and motifs, emphasizing melody over outright technique. "I wanted the listener to know that Kenny Garrett has a lot of different sides," the saxophonist states, adding that "people already know that I can play high-energy jazz. This record is part of an evolution for me."

While it might be easy (and inappropriate) to equate Garrett's progression with a stepping away from hardcore jazz tradition, the saxophonist is adamant that "Simply Said" is a move toward furthering jazz. "The music must be pushed forward somehow, and the way for me as an artist to do that is to create new compositions that other people might want to play," he says. "A lot of jazz standards have been done so frequently, that they're just overdone. It puts jazz at a standstill."

Thematically, "Simply Said" reads like a travelogue of Garrett's career. "A lot of the songs were inspired by experiences I've had or people I've met," he explains. "'Charlie Brown Goes To South Africa' is reminiscent of my experiences touring with Sting, when I went to Africa, Indonesia, and Greece and had a chance to absorb those cultures. 'Delta Bali Blues' is based on a scale that I learned in Indonesia, mixed with the sound of a Japanese singer I worked with, and with the American sound of the Mississippi Delta added in."

Garrett points to the album's infinitely funky "G.T.D.S." (Give The Drummer Some), featuring the electric bass of Marcus Miller, as "reminiscent of the things I did with Miles, a simple melody over a steady groove type of thing. Some of the things I'm hearing in music these days remind me of that period of my career, and I sort of picked up on that for this tune."

by Steve Graybow

In a similar way, "Conversations With Hutcherson," inspired by Bobby Hutcherson, is a tribute to the knowledge that the vibraphonist imparted to the younger Garrett when the two worked on Hutcherson's recent release, "Skyline" (Verve). "Bobby inspired me to check out some of his own influences," says Garrett. "The song was written to feature chord voicings that Bobby would use, with some classical elements and a strong melody similar to something he would write."

Despite "Simply Said's" focus on composition, it would be remiss to discuss the album without mentioning that it is not totally bereft of the intense playing that is Garrett's live calling card. Witness the nine minute-plus "Organized Colors" and the following track, "3rd Quadrant," both of which feature group and solo improvisation at its finest. Garrett has not hidden his skills so much as sharply honed them.

"This record is the sound of my core band [pianist Shedrick Mitchell, bassist Nat Reeves, and drummer Chris Dave], with flavors added by some of my friends [Miller and guitarist Pat Metheny, among others]," says Garrett. "I integrated [the guests'] sounds into the band's sound, rather than having them stretch out. There are many flavors on 'Simply Said,' and I think there's something there for everyone to relate to, whether they like hardcore jazz or strong melodies. Hopefully, people will see how it's all related.

"What Kenny Garrett will do next, I have no idea. All I know is that it will have even more variety. And that," Garrett adds with a chuckle, "is simply said."

Digidesign Trade-In Offer Fans Flames In MDM/DAW Debate

P UNTIL NOW, proponents of the two leading digital recording mediums—tape and hard-disc have argued the merits of either format in a dispassionate, academic discourse.

However, the latest move by workstation giant Digidesign is likely to at least heighten the pitch of the debate, if not start a war between the

In an unprecedented promotion, Digidesign is offering a $1,000 rebate to anyone who trades in a modular digital multitrack (MDM) for its Pro Tools 24, Pro Tools 24 Mix, or Pro Tools 44 MixPlus system.

The wording of the promotion is at least as eye-opening as the offer itself. Headlined "Is Tape Dead?," the Digidesign program, announced via a press release and posted on the Palo Alto, Calif.-based company's Web site, says, "Tape is fine for some things—sealing up boxes, taking some ring out of a snare drum, posting messages on a computer monitor. But using it to record music? Haven't we moved past that yet?"

The announcement goes on to say that digital audio workstations are "infinitely more liberating, more powerful, better sounding, and ultimately less expensive than any digital tape-based system" and that "the only reason digital tape recorders are still around is that many engineers out there aren't fully aware of the power of a Digidesign digital audio workstation."

To prove its point, Digidesign is conducting a showdown between its Pro Tools platform and the Alesis Adat and Tascam DA-88 MDM systems. (Digi's trade-in promotion includes those two MDMs, plus the Fostex RD8 and Sony PCM-800, which are modeled after the Adat and DA-88, respectively.)

by Paul Verna

The offer is available in most major territories, including the U.S., Canada, the U.K., France, and Italy, according to information on the Digidesign site.

Digidesign director of sales for the Americas Christopher Bock says the MDM trade-in offer was designed not to alienate MDM manufacturers but to encourage people to seriously consider a digital audio workstation.

"Alesis introduced the Adat in the early '90s as a really quiet, low-cost alternative to analog tape," explains Bock. "At that same time, computer storage was expensive, processing was slow, and the price per track of a hard-disc system was really high. Now, it's completely shifted. For about $15,000, you can get a 64-track system with really good storage, lots of plug-ins, and higher bit-rates than a DASH machine."

Bock adds that the audio industry needed a wake-up call on the tapevs.-hard-disc issue.

"We're a hybrid computer and audio company, and in the computer industry, it's war," he says. "The audio industry needs to be shaken up a little bit, too. All we're saying is, if you have this tape studio, we'll take back your Adat or DA-88. If I were Tascam or Alesis, within the context of this program, I don't know if I would be mad about [it], but I might be worried that I'm selling linear tape."

Digidesign channel marketing manager Terry Hardin adds, "We still support Alesis with our Adat bridge"—an interface that allows digital transfers between Pro Tools workstations and Alesis MDMs.

Responding to the Digidesign promotion, Alesis director of marketing Peter Chaikin says, "Is tape dead? No, tape is far from dead, and hard-disc is not a replacement for tape. If you ask a professional music recording engineer if they would track to

Toy Specialists Rides Rental-Gear Trend

Clients Offered A Wide Range Of High-Tech Products, Services

BY DAN DALEY

NEW YORK—Say the word "rent" to a New Yorker, and it provokes images of $1,500-a-month, five-flightwalk-up studio apartments. But in another context, rentals are what enable many recording studios to exist at a time when the pro audio industry has more formats than ever.

This cornucopia of technological excess is simultaneously liberating and frustrating; new formats bring with them new and more creative ways of working, but they also strain the attention span and budgets of studios, engineers, artists, and producers. It's become impossible for recording facilities to anticipate every media and outboard processing request that clients can have.

That scenario has driven the rental niche in major cities like New York in recent years. And at Toy Specialists, which celebrates its 15th anniversary here this year, staying ahead of the curve has been a way of life.

"Rentals have been expanding tremendously in recent years, simply because there are so many formats out there that no one can be expected to be able to afford them all," says Bill Tesar, who with his wife, Rita, founded Toy Specialists in 1984 from a single piece of gear: a Linn drum machine that Tesar, a session drummer, saw as the leading edge of a technology wave that was about to revolutionize the industry.

Tesar bought one Linn machine, which initially were difficult to come by, in 1983 and began programming for sessions. The following year he started renting it out at $65 per day, marketing the machine with direct mailings and responding to rental calls using another new technology at the time, a digital pager.

The first month, the rentals brought in $1,000, and Tesar knew he was on to something. He soon expanded to other new percussion and synthesizer systems, including the Emu Drumulator, the Simmons SDS-5 digital drum kit, and one of the most revolutionary items at the time: the Yamaha DX-7 digital synthesizer.

Tesar and his wife financed the acquisition of new music technologies using credit cards. "We had a stack of them," he recalls. "At the time, credit was easy to get, and the new technologies were coming out at a pace that made it pretty easy to keep up with them. And the company was based on the idea that we would always be the first to get a new item."

Fifteen years later, credit is still

'There are so many formats out there no one can be expected to afford them all' readily available, but the rate at which new products are arriving has increased exponentially, and that has changed the focus of Toy Specialists.

Now, with more than 3,800 barcoded pieces of equipment in its 6,000square-foot facility on Manhattan's West Side, the company has adapted itself to the dense technology field by providing a "try before you buy" type of service, in which clients often rent media systems such as the Otari RADAR II and ProTools MIXplus hard-disc systems, then decide which platform they prefer to work with. And, as a retailer for about 50 manufacturers, Toy Specialists can often sell customers the gear after they have worked with it and provide technical support afterward.

That kind of vertical market has propelled Toy Specialists' growth an average of 20% per year over the last five years, but it also means that Tesar has had to assume risks.

"We sometimes get stuck with a format that doesn't win industry acceptance," he concedes. "But that's the basis of our service. We take the risk so the client doesn't have to."

Another outgrowth of a multiplicity of formats is Toy Specialists' TransferMAT transfer studio, which can handle any of the formats the company warehouses, including DASH, PD, Adat, DA-88, DAT, digital compact cassette, hard disc, etc. The studio uses Yamaha 02R digital consoles and an Otari UFC-24 universal format converter.

The transfer service, says Tesar, is responding to rapidly increasing demand as musicians, producers, and engineers find themselves working in multiple formats on each project.

Another byproduct of that trend is the increased need for archiving to various formats, and Toy Specialists has found another new service market in that area. It is doing archiving for a new range of clients, such as publisher Warner/Chappell Music, and recently completed a project archiving the entire Kinks catalog to a Genex 8000 magneto/optical disc under the supervision of Kinks leader Ray Davies.

"Our strength now is based on our ability to read the market and react quickly to what it wants," he says. "We're getting calls for multichannel surround systems and other things for [high-definition television]. But we now have to be careful as we move into yet more formats."

In order to help it gauge the market for new formats, Toy Specialists hired industry veteran Mark McKenna as VP of sales and marketing. McKenna joins from Bearsville Studios, where he was GM.

Cher, Hynde Among Ivors' U.S. Winners

BY DOMINIC PRIDE

LONDON-American voices dominated a truly British event at this year's Ivor Novello Awards, held May 27 here. Cher, Chrissie Hynde, and Hal David were among the U.S. writers feted at the 44th Ivors at London's Grosvenor House Hotel.

"Believe" by Cher won a hat trick of trophies, scooping best song musically and lyrically, international hit of the year, and bestselling U.K. single (Billboard-Bulletin, May 28). The American artist is signed to WEA U.K., and the song was written and produced by a British team consisting of Brian Higgins, Stuart McLennan, Paul Barry, Steve Torch, Matt Gray, and Tim Powell.

EMI/Chrysalis star Robbie Williams and his songwriting partner Guy Chambers walked off with two Ivors: "Angels" won as the most performed work in 1998, as measured by the Performing Right Society, and the duo also nabbed songwriters of the year.

Accepting the first award, Chambers said, "We wrote 'Angels' in June '97 in my attic in Archway [north London] in half an hour. It was the best half hour of my life!"

Accepting the songwriter award, Williams confessed to being "overwhelmed by the whole of the music business.

"I wanted to be up there with George Michael and Oasis. People laughed at me," he said, before roundly telling his one-time detractors to "fuck off."

Pretenders vocalist/guitarist Chrissie Hynde, who has been based in the U.K. since the late '70s, received the outstanding contribution to British music and was more self-deprecating. "I just wanted to play guitar and be in a band," she confessed. "I don't know how this

Hal David, 78, whose songs have been covered by British artists from Cilla Black in the '60s to Gabrielle in the '90s, was given the special international award, made for the first time this year.

Rod Stewart was honored for his lifetime achievement and confessed that his worldwide breakthrough hit "Maggie May" was originally slated to be a B-side. Stewart dedicated the award to Ronnie Wood, his former collaborator in the Jeff Beck Group and Faces. "It's nice to have something that Elton John hasn't got," he quipped.

Martin Gore, key songwriter for Depeche Mode, was recognized for the band's overseas success with the international achievement award.

Outstanding song collection went to the writers of Jamiroquai: Jason Kay, Simon Katz, Derrick McKenzie, Toby Smith, Wallis Buchanan, and Stuart Zender.

The Jimmy Kennedy Award. saluting those who have maintained the art and heritage of British songwriting, went to Mitch Murray and Peter Callander, writers of songs for the likes of Cliff Richard, Cilla Black, and Petula Clark.

The Ivors event is presented by the British Academy of Composers and Songwriters, a new body that has taken over the work of the British Academy of Songwriters, Composers & Authors, which previously awarded the Ivors.

German Label MFS Releasing Techno/Trance MiniDisc Mix

LONDON-Berlin techno label MFS is hoping to add a little momentum to the pre-recorded MiniDisc (MD) market with what it claims is the first techno/trance mix on the for-

"Assorted: E For Europe" was released in March with an initial pressing of just 1,000. It has sold more than 800, says the label, mainly through independent stores

MFS label chief Mark Reeder says he made the decision to produce the compilation after seeing the small amount of dance MD repertoire for sale in Germany and elsewhere in

"I checked many stores in England; I checked stores around Germany," he says. "I discovered that there are no clubby/trancy/techno DJ-mixed compilation albums available on MD. So I decided to make

He hopes his release will encourage others.

"Once more techno and club labels release on this format, then they'll automatically generate interest, especially as this music is geared to a younger audience anyway," he says.

The techno kids and the stores have to be aware that there is a product on the market that the kids can buy for their MD players," he adds. This compilation is simply modern technological music for a modern technological medium."

Sony-owned manufacturer DADC in Austria sponsored the project. Without that support, says Reeder, it would have been a more expensive prospect for the label.

"The MD market is a virgin market, and to be pioneering you have nothing against which to orientate yourself against, so you can make mistakes.

Mixed by Hungarian DJ Corvin Dalek, the compilation contains 12 tracks by Berlin acts such as Marmion, Cybersecrecy, Chris Zippel, Blue Amazon, and Dillinger & Capone, as well as the title track, Dalek's "E For Europe."

"This album was created not only to present a new futuristic format or to be the soundtrack to the last summer of the century," says Dalek, "but also as a tongue-in-cheek homage to the soonto-be-extinct currencies of Europe.

The artwork and theme of the MD revolve around the new euro currency, due to replace many of Europe's national currencies in July 2002.

"All kids now know that money in the Europe of the future will be called E, and everyone will be able to laugh about that and say, 'Have you any E's?' Dalek. E is also the club slang for ecstasy, the drug that has accompanied the explosion of house, trance, and techno in Europe since

Alan Phillips, VP of new technology for Sony Music Europe, says the format is gaining interest from the dance community. Last year, Sony helped the indie Bullion Records issue "Sub Level U.K.," an underground garage compilation, while Fatboy Slim's "You've Come A Long Way, Baby" (Skint/Sony) and "The INCredible Sound of Drum'n'bass,' mixed by Goldie (INCredible/DancePool), are just two of the many dance titles available on the format.

Phillips says that between 2.7 and 2.8 million MD players have been sold in Europe since the format's launch in 1992, with Germany the key market; a million players have been sold in the last year alone. Yet, says Phillips, British music retailers are the most proactive in stocking

WHILE MANY other Japanese labels struggled amid the country's recession, Avex, Japan's biggest indie, saw its sales and profits rise in the year ending March 31. Sales of the parent company, Avex Inc., were up 9.2% to 52.3 billion yen ($439.1 million), operating profit rose 65.7% to 7.2 billion yen ($61.1 million), while after-tax profit posted a 63.1% increase to 7.3 billion yen ($61.4 backs of such best-selling albums as Every Little Thing's "Time To Destination," with 4.12 million units sold, according to Avex; globe's "Relation," with 2.05 million copies sold; and Max's "Maximum Groove," at 1.05 million units. On a consolidated basis, the Avex group's sales rose 15.3% to 65 billion yen ($545.9 million), while operating profit was up 92.8% to 9.8 billion yen ($82.4 million) and after-tax profit increased 90.7% to 9.8 billion yen ($82.4 STEVE McCLURE

INTEREST AND PARTICIPATION in music remains high in Germany, according to a report by the German Music Information Center. Roughly 8 million people, including just under 3 million children and young people, play in orchestras and ensembles, as well as rock and jazz groups, or sing in choirs. Each year, more than 3,000 young people continue this interest by embarking on studies of music at government and private education facilities. Concerts given by publicly funded orchestras and music theaters attract more than 13 million people each year, according to the report.

Revenues in the music industry, including the record market, have reached $16 billion and are growing substantially more quickly than the economy as a whole. Public-sector funding, which ensures the continued existence of numerous institutions and allows a wide range of different projects and initiatives to be implemented, comes to approximately $3 billion. A VICTORY against bootleggers is being claimed after what is said to be a precedent-setting court case in Northampton, England. The Crown Court there convicted Nigel Simons of offenses under the Copyright Act relating to his importation of bootleg CDs from the Czech Republic, Singapore, and Taiwan. He was given a four-month prison sentence, suspended for two years. However, the significance of the case lies in three days of legal argument at an earlier hearing at Warwick Crown Court. Warwickshire County Council Trading Standards Officer Noel Hunter says this argument established that the burden of proof over whether the artist had given permission for the bootleg to be recorded now lies with the defense rather than the prosecution. Hunter comments, "This landmark ruling will make the prosecution of traders in bootleg CDs far easier now that we are not obliged to pull members of the Rolling Stones or Oasis to the witness box to prove our case," JEFF CLARK-MEADS

Martin, Lopez Help Pick Up The Pace Of Canada's Latin Beat

TORONTO—Platinum (100,000 units) sales of recent albums by Ricky Martin, Jennifer Lopez, Selena, and the Buena Vista Social Club are boosting the profile of Latin music in Canada.

Traditional sources of immigrants to Canada-notably Europe and Southeast Asia—are now giving way to Latin America (and also mainland China). As a result, such major Canadian cities as Toronto Montreal, Quebec, and Vancouver are beginning to have significant Hispanic communities, creating a base for what one senior executive calls the "huge potential" for Latin music in Canada.

Flagship stores of major Canadian music retailers in downtown Toronto sell impressive selections of Latin recordings-from mainstream releases by Martin, Lopez, and Selena to world beat acts like the Afro-Cuban All Stars, Compay Segundo, Cubanismo!, Rubén González, and Los Mocosos-and specialty retail outlets Super Latin Music and Rincon Hispano do a thriving trade in more obscure Latin releases.

According to the last government census in 1996, 400,000 people whose mother tongue is Spanish now live in Canada. The majority— 230,000—live in the metropolitan Toronto region. Toronto has two Spanish-language daily newspapers, El Popular and El Expresso; it also has a vibrant Latin nightclub scene, and the city's Harbourfront Centre domestic Latin acts throughout the summer

selling [in Canada] is to the Englishspeaking audience," notes Tim Baker, buyer with Sunrise Records. which operates 33 stores in Ontario.

Underscoring its commitment to its Latino roster, Sony Music's strategic marketing division domestically released 22 Latin titles May 11 that had previously been available only on import, including albums by Martin, Elvis Crespo, Chavanne, Alejandro Fernández, and Shakira. EMI and Warner have offered similar programs in the past year.

There's a huge potential market for Latino music in Canada," says Greg Pappas, director of strategic marketing at Sony Music Entertainment (Canada).

"We now have a good foundation—release domestically because we expect them to do well." says Georgia Tsao, international marketing manager at Warner Music Canada. "With the success of Ricky Martin, there's not a language barrier any-

"[Latino| sales are still mostly through Toronto and Montreal, says Rick Hiir, manager of Latin Music at Koch International, "In promoting Latino acts, you focus first on the Latino audience as a base and then expand on it. We do in-store promotions with DJs where we offer free samplers, and non-Latinos go nuts."

Adds Rick Cammileri, president of Sony Music Entertainment (Canada), "We don't look at these as being Spanish-language records. We're marketing it as rhythm-oriented music in clubs and using remixes and street marketing.'

Billy Bryan heads the Torontobased Mundial Music Pool, which services 20 campus radio stations and music critics in Ontario, "Much of the Hispanic activity here," he says, "is in world music. Records which would have sold 500 copies five years ago are selling 5,000 copies today'

Many industry figures here predict that Martin's Canadian breakact as the springboard for launching uncoming English-language releases by such top Spanish-language stars as U.S. salsa heartthrob Marc Anthony, Puerto Rico's Crespo, Colombian-born pop-rocker Shakira, ranchero singer Fernández, and the pop-styled Julio Iglesias Jr.

"The excitement around Ricky heightened interest in Jennifer single "If You Had My Love" was No. 21 on The Record's chart for the week ending May 25. Hopes are high that Martin's popularity could also further boost interest in upcoming Spanish-language releases by Alejandro Sanz, Luis Miguel, Enrique Iglesias, Laura Pausini, and Maná, who have previously made inroads here, as well as heighten the careers of local Latino acts.

While international veterans Tito Puente, Celia Cruz, Willie Colón, Julio Iglesias, and Gloria Estefan have traditionally had strong Canaseriously considered the potential power of Latin music following the enormous TV coverage here of World Cup soccer in 1994, when Toronto streets and Latin clubs overflowed with Hispanic fans.

Shortly after that, with the cooperation of Sony Music and Warner Music, Sunrise Records launched an ambitious program spotlighting Latin recordings at select outlets. Today, Sunrise carries Latin product throughout the chain, and 15 stores stock a Latin catalog of 2,000. Sunrise also sponsors the national TV show "Vivai Musica," which airs four nights a week on the TeleLatino network.

As sales of U.S.-imported and domestically released Spanish-language and Latin American music grew, other Canadian retail chains followed Sunrise's lead and began to stock Spanish-language releases.

Several industry figures argue, however, that Latino music still has considerable ground to cover before becoming a full-fledged market. "There's definitely a [Latino] market here, but [retailers] need to be cautious about how big the market is," warns Roger Whiteman, VP of purchasing for HMV Canada, which operates 98 stores nationally.

FNAC PLANS BROAD ONLINE EXPANSION

the break-even point in 2002-2003. "Our aim is to stay the leader in the French-speaking market with a target share of between 40% and 60%.' says Pinault. In France, FNAC has 51 outlets. "With them, we can reach only 25 million to 26 million people; i.e., less than 50% of French inhabi-

Within three years, FNAC plans to have approximately 80 outlets covering 32 million to 33 million people, "but that will be our maximum size," Pinault adds, "and thus the Internet is the way to allow us to increase our number of customers in France and abroad, where we consider that another 25 million people are potential clients. The Internet will help us double the number of potential customers." He adds that Internet sales may also help FNAC take market share from hypermarkets, which account for approximately 60% of music sales in France.

In addition, FNAC is targeting non-French-speaking markets online, and its overseas brick-andmortar expansion is continuing. Outside France, it already operates in Spain and Portugal; it was to open its first Brazilian outlet in São Paulo June 2 and is slated to open its first Asian store July 14 in Taiwan. The company also plans to enter Italy next year and is looking at the Argentine market.

An existing FNAC Web site (www. fnac.fr) already offers records (150,000 titles), books (250,000 titles), video, and computer software. FNAC plans to open a new version of its Web site at www.fnac. com this fall. "Our first Web site, launched in February 1997, was a test," says Pinault, "However, we have increased threefold our transactions since the beginning of 1999, and according to our research FNAC accounted for 40% of electronic trade in cultural products in France during 1998, with sales of 3.5 million euros [$3.7 million].

The Web site will be in four languages, Pinault explains: French, Spanish, Portuguese, and Italian, and FNAC aims to harmonize its pricing policy.

"When we have sites in Spanish, Portuguese, Italian, and French, we will apply the same price policy across the Internet; that's why we hope that the record companies will quickly harmonize their price policy inside the European market," says Hermann, However, Pinault is unhappy about the threat to FNAC's online business posed by cheaper-priced CDs available on U.S. Web sites. "Twice a month," he says, "FNAC compares the prices on the Internet of 60 albums [new releases, back catalog, etc.] on 11 sites, and U.S.based Web site prices are about 35% cheaper than in France. Around half of this difference is due to the Ivalue-added taxl, which is 20.6% in France, and the rest is due to the fact that major [record] companies don't apply the same price policy to retailers in the U.S. That's why we're demanding that the majors ban U.S.-based Web sites from selling product in Europe. If they don't, we will open a Web site in the U.S. in order to sell international catalog in Europe at the same price level of our competitors. threatens Pinault.

FNAC is poised to meet with Sony Music in July to discuss this issue.

Martin Burns Up Canadian Charts Latin Star's New Album, Single Hit The Top

BY LARRY LeBLANC

TORONTO-Ricky Martin's bilingual performance of his 1998 World Čup theme, "La Copa De La Vida (The Cup Of Life)," during the Grammy Awards broadcast on Feb. 24, not only directly impacted on Canadian sales of his Columbia album "Vuelve" but spurred interest in his eponymous English-language debut, released here May 11.

"Ricky's career exploded in that one five-minute performance," says Rick Cammileri, president of Sony Music Entertainment (Canada). "Ricky Martin" debuted at No. 1 on SoundScan's Top Retail Albums chart and has sold 115,000 units to date. The album's leadoff single, "Livin' La Vida Loca," has been No. 1 on Broadcast Data System's Contemporary Hit Radio chart and has also hit its adult contemporary chart.

"Ricky had no track record at Canadian radio previously, but the single just exploded," says Vel Omazic, director of national promotion, Sony Music Entertainment (Canada). "After the Grammys, sales of 'Vuelve' soared. We knew beforehand that 'Ricky Martin' was going to be big. We had a good [sales] base with Martin's upcoming appearance.

the earlier albums 'Meamras' and Vuelve,' but since the Grammys it's been mayhem.'

Prior to Martin's Grammy performance, "Vuelve" was at No. 171 on SoundScan's Top Retail Albums chart. The week following the award show, the album jumped to No. 35; according to SoundScan, it has scanned 105,000 units to date.

Martin's Canadian profile will be further raised by promotion jaunts June 24-25 in Toronto and June 26 in Montreal. Massive crowds are expected for Martin's interviews on the MuchMusic TV network in Toronto and on MuchMusic's French-language counterpart in Montreal. MusiquePlus, as well as for his instore appearance at Sunrise Records' flagship store on Toronto's Yonge Street.

Two years ago, a Martin signing at Toronto's Yorkdale Mall drew far larger crowds than expected. Organizers had anticipated a crowd of 200-300. At least 1,500 fans turned out, and the appearance had to be cut

LATEST MUSIC NEWS FROM AROUND THE PLANET

EDITED BY DOMINIC PRIDE

HITTING THE current swing and mambo revival, the single "Mambo No. 5" by 23-yearold singer Lou Bega (Lautstark/BMG Berlin Musik) is No. 1 for the second week in Germany and being readied for release throughout Europe by BMG this summer (including July 5 in the U.K.). The single has been certified gold for sales of 250,000 copies in Germany. Produced by Achim Kleist at Munichbased Syndicate Production, the song is based on a '50s instrumental made popular by Cuban Perez Prado, the "King of Mambo." Subtitled "A Little Bit Of . . .," the song features rhyming lyrics that name women who brighten up the singer's life. After Bega made a mid-April appearance on the TV game show "Glückspirale," the song became a major airplay hit. Open-air festival appearances are planned for the artist, as is a domestic rush release of an album. Bega, who's of Sicilian/Ugandan descent, says, "I grew up with this music, and I always thought it was a shame there were no lyrics to sing along to this particular song.' ELLIE WEINERT

THE NIGHTCRAWLERS, whose "Push The Feeling On" was a No. 3 U.K. hit in 1995, showcased their first material for their new label, River Horse Records, May 24 in London. Front man and songwriter John Reid aired five soul-tinged songs from an album due in September, including the Eurofriendly single "Never Knew Love," which gets a U.K. release via 3MV/TEN June 21. Outside the U.K., it will be handled through Sony Independent Network Europe (SINE). Before signing to River Horse—the new label formed by former Warner-Chappell exec Robin Godfrey-Cass—the Nightcrawlers have been signed to ffrr/London and Final Vinyl/Arista. Reid is writing with Lionel Richie, and Tina Turner has recorded his song "When The Heartache Is DOMINIC PRIDE

THE MALE HIP-HOP/DANCE duo Clon recently became the first Korean band to simultaneously release an album in Korea and Taiwan. Titled "Funky Together," the 10song set—the duo's third album—was released in Korea by Seoul-based label Retro Music and in Taiwan by Rock Records. "It was a niche-market attack strategy," says Retro music director Kim Dong-Joon. "Ballads are mainstream pop music in Taiwan, but demand for hip-hop is [also] strong. Language does not seem to be important—it's the beat." So far, "Funky Together" has sold more than 150,000 copies in Taiwan and a similar number in Korea, according to Retro. Last September, Rock released "The Best," an album containing Clon's first two albums. Retro says that set has sold some 450,000 copies in Taiwan. Clon recently did two promotion tours in Taiwan, and this month plans a nationwide tour of Korea CHO HYUN-JIN headlines back home. The track, performed by the four-teenager group ABBA Teens, is No. 1 for the third week. It sold 30,000 copiesachieving platinum status-in two weeks, according to Stockholm Records managing director Ola Håkansson. "There's a [strong] demand for that single," he says. "It's definitely one of the three quickest-selling singles here ever." The track is approved by Mono Music, which administers the Abba legacy, and the group also has permission to use the Abba logo. The four teenagers are 16-year-old Amit "Benny" Paul, 16-yearold Marie "Anni-Frid" Serneholt, 15-year-old Sara "Agnetha" Lumholdt, and 15year-old Dhani "Björn" Lennevald. The four were selected from a group of 120 teenagers at an audition held by Stockholm Records. KALR, LOFTHUS

 $\mbox{{\it HANDS}}$ ON APPROACH, a three-piece act from the Portuguese city of Setubal, near Lisbon, is seeing strong local airplay for the Pearl Jam/R.E.M.-style "My Wonder Moon," the first single from its debut album, "Blown." The act, signed to Universal, is following in the footsteps of compatriots Silence 4 by having local success singing in English. Tracks from "Blown"—which has been certified gold, selling 20,000 copies—are receiving strong airplay in Portugal. The band is expecting a busy summer promoting the set, although no international release is scheduled so far. NUNO GALOPIM

IT'S GETTING CROWDED IN THE LADIES DEPARTMENT in the Netherlands, with three new female acts gaining attention. One month after her departure as a VJ from the music TV station TMF, Fabienne (EMI) has a top 20 single. Her "Will You Still Love Me," written by Leah Andreone and Rick Neigher and produced by Joey Balin, is an in-yer-face rocker. A little more sophisticated, E'velvne rocks and croons on her self-titled debut album. featuring the ballad "I Would" and the storming "A Little Love"- both airplay hits. The set is the first English-language release for Sony's S.M.A.R.T. label, home of chartbusters Acda & De Munnik. Most sensitive is Kirke, a female singer/songwriter duo in a Nick Drake/Joni Mitchell vein; the duo's debut album, "Kirke's Island," marks the first album release on the Mercurydistributed label Paradiso Amsterdam Records. These acts follow the recent success of "chick rock" star Anouk and country diva Ilse DeLange.

The Hall's prez is a man on a mission, and he carries a big dream book.

by Jim Bessman

hen Bobby Weinstein took over as president and CEO of the National Academy Of Popular Music (NAPM) and the Songwriters' Hall of Fame in 1993, he was perfectly positioned to bring an organization—and its long-held goal of a physical facility for honoring popular music's greatest creators—into the next millennium. Carrying on the tradition of NAPM's esteemed founders Johnny Mercer, Abe Olman and Howard Richmond, Weinstein, of course, was himself an estimable songwriter, having penned such standards as "Goin' Out Of My Head" and "Hurt So Bad." But Weinstein, with his many years of executive service at BMI in the writer/publisher-relations domain, also was keenly aware of the younger songwriters who were rising up to take the places of the legendary Broadway and Tin Pan Alley songwriters who naturally comprised NAPM and the SHOF's early rosters.

The following conversation with Weinstein, held shortly before this year's Songwriters' Hall Of Fame induction ceremony, explores the current activities and goals of NAPM and the SHOF, including that of turning the dream of an actual Hall Of Fame and museum celebrating popular music songwriters into reality.

What is the mission of the Songwriters' Hall of Fame?

The initial mission, which has been in place since Johnny Mercer, Howie Richmond and Abe Olman founded it, was to create a Hall of Fame, with the emphasis very much on the Broadway giants, because Mercer felt the necessity to catch up with the space of time when there was no Songwriters' Hall of Fame. He wanted to make sure that the better-known writers were included and inducted while they were still alive and around, so they inducted people by the truckload in the beginning, to make sure everybody who counted was in.

Did this mission change?

Mercer was the president when the Hall of Fame was first established in 1969. After he passed, Sammy Cahn picked up the torch and became president, and the mission expanded to offering services to the public—especially students and people who were interested in the music industry. So there were songwriter workshops and classes, and informational gatherings on Hall of Fame inductees—all done before the great leaps in technology. When Sammy arrived, accounting was done by people with rubber bands and visors on their heads! He tried his darnedest to make everything grow into the future and really did a great job, because he was so dedicated. You'd think that he had only songwriting on his mind, but the other big love and mission in his life was to see that the Hall of Fame got to the point where it was running successfully.

The emphasis then was on American popular music.

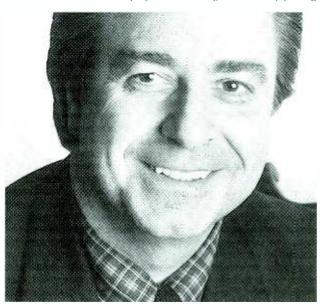

Since it was the National Academy Of Popular Music, it allowed for induction of only American songwriters. When I got on the board of directors 19 years ago, I became aware of the restrictions on honoring or inducting anybody not born in the United States—and threatened to resign. It wasn't only me, but others also felt that John Lennon and Paul McCartney were worthy, as well as Paul Anka, Charles Aznavour and Mick Jagger and Keith Richards. At some point, the board had to say something—and then Sammy's eyes lit up, and he said that music is an international language and we needed to make a change, and the international category was created.

How else did the concept evolve?

The evolution of the music industry itself prescribed that more contemporary considerations be made, that the Hall of Fame not be limited to Lerner and Loewe and Rodgers and Hart and the Broadway people who were writing for the screen. Music is an international language and an everlasting language, and you have to stay current. Can you deny rap music? Heavy metal? All these things have to be considered, and I have to stay current, because the music is going to change again. Whether it's pop or country or gospel or classical, we have to stay with every form of music that exists, and stay focused on every kind of people who write that music.

Do you have any other memories of when you first came on the board?

When I was considered for the board, I was affectionately referred to as "the pisher"—which in Yiddish means somebody who pees his pants! But, even when I became president after Sammy's passing, several senior members took it upon themselves to scold me like I was a child and continued to relate to my age. But, though I was very young in doing a job that Cahn and Mercer had done at one time, I had to remind them that I was only nine years older than the President of the United States, and not to get mad at me because I don't look my age!

The Billhoard Interview: BOBY WEINSTEIN

How does the organization operate today?

Various changes have been made to create an organization that is run very democratically at this point—and not one where there's a master at the helm saying, "This is the way it will be!" Talk to anybody on the board: I never raise the gavel and say, "This is my command!" I always put things before the board and committees to make decisions, and if they like it, we do, and if not, we don't. And that's how the voting process takes place for induction; I receive mailings from a variety of different people who think their brothers or husbands or wives should be inducted, and all of us on the board keep folders for mailings we receive, and we accept any and all suggestions. Then I appoint a nominating committee each year, which is rotated after every dinner to give everybody on the board a turn and a fair shake. Usually, the committee is eight or nine people, and they sit in on four or five meetings and create a slate that they put before the board for approval, and if the board approves it, we print the slate in ballot form and send it out to the membership, and then they vote on it.

As for the board itself, it's really terrific. There are some 40 members, well-known music-industry people who are provocative and air their thoughts and ideas and roll up their sleeves and get involved. April Anderson, our new managing director, is always full of ideas and works closely with Bob Leone, our special-projects director, who's in charge of the songwriter showcases and seminars and scholarships to students and up-and-coming songwriters from funds originally established by Abe Olman—who provided a lump sum of money from his estate. We take the interest generated from the principal every year for the grants, which are given out each year at a party in January—when we also announce the forthcoming inductions.

Everything seems to be operating smoothly.

The Songwriters' Hall of Fame is alive and well, and functioning like a well-oiled machine. We're also working closely with the Board of Education in New York and in the tristate area to give out other scholarship monies, from another lump sum donated expressly to benefit people who can write marching-band music.

Is there any contact with the remaining "founding down with him in California—reaching deep down inside of him to get the colors of his original dream to help color my own picture with his colors—and it's very important to me to work with a man whose idea it all was in the first place! His dream has become my dream. I got to share it with Sammy, and, though I didn't get to know Johnny Mercer, I'm sure I would have shared it with him, too. But now the torch is passed to me. I do a lot of things in my life, but this mission is very important to me.

Of course, the one thing missing is an actual Songwriters' Hall of Fame edifice.

That's the one thing left to do. Even though the Hall of Fame is a functioning vehicle, we still need to find a space and the means to create a living museum. We had a museum site at one point at One Times Square, a very modest museum on the eighth floor. It offered limited space to exhibit artifacts and memorabilia, but it was pro bono, and when the owner sold the building we were out of there! At that

t started with a song. The Songwriters' Hall of Fame (SHOF) and its official sponsor, the National Academy Of Popular Music (NAPM), actually evolved from the strong feelings that the writers of many successful songs were often ignored or overlooked

Howie Richmond, head of The Richmond Organization (TRO) independent music publisher; his close associate, Abe Olman; and songwriter/businessman Johnny Mercer shared the same concerns, recalls songwriter/folklorist Oscar Brand.

'We've got to start an organization that gives writers the credits they deserve," Richmond emphasized in getting the project off the ground. The only living member of the founding trio also notes that the motivation to start the SHOF was linked with efforts toward amending the U.S. Copyright Act of 1909 to extend the protection from the 28plus-28 or 56-year-limit.

SHOF were able to get Congress to extend existing copyright protection year-by-year until the new Copyright Act became law in 1976.

Brand notes that Mercer, a founder of the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences (NARAS) and a successful businessman, was a moving force for the Academy and SHOF, becoming its first president in 1969.

"Irving Berlin and George Gershwin were the first honorees by acclamation," Brand recalls. "In 1970, we had our first annual dinner with more inductees, including Mercer, Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein II, Duke Ellington and Rudolf Friml, among others. Friml played the piano while Alan Jones sang 'Donkey Serenade,' Friml's hit song from 'Firefly.' Then Eubie Blake sang 'I'm Just Wild About Harry' and brought the house down."

In the third year, there were 27 inductees, including Pete Seeger, and there are now more than 300 honorees. There are three categories of voting for inductees: national, international and posthumous, with the final selection based on extensive research and significant help from ASCAP, BMI, SESAC and the Songwriters Guild Of America.

The was a poet, a spinner of dreams, and he touched everyone with his songs," says Margaret Whiting of the late Johnny Mercer (1909-1976). He also was a moving force in organizing the Songwriters' Hall of Fame and the National Academy of Popular Music and its first president. A true son of the South, with his roots in Savaimah, Ga., Mercer wrote songs for 90 movies, was a top radio personality and recording artist, was a co-founder and president of Capitol Records, wrote six Broadway shows, discovered and nurtured the talents of Jo Stafford, Peggy Lee, Frank Sinatra and Nat King Cole and was nominated 17 times and won four Academy Awards. Over more than four decades, his lyrics came naturally from the colorful way that people talked, in such timeless standards as "Black Magic," "Glow Worm," "Days Of Wine And Roses," "Moon River," "Laura," "And The Angels Sing," "One For My Baby," "Satin Doll" and "Tangerine,"

press agent to such legends as Glenn Miller, the Andrews Sisters, Guy Lombardo, Woody Herman, Gene Krupa, Dinah Shore and Frank Sinatra, among many others. His first publishing hit was Billy Whitlock's "Hop Scotch Polka," followed in succession by such classics as "Music, Music, Music, Tzena, Tzena, Tzena, Tzena," "Goodnight Irene," "The Thing," "The Roving Kind," "So Long (It's Been Good To Know Yuh)" and "Botcha Me." He was the first to use a panel of 200 radio DJs to "test" the records of his songs, and, with British associate David Platz, published a group of memorable theater works by Leslie Bricusse, Anthony Newley and Lionel Bart.

friendly man with multi-faceted abilities that helped him carve out one of the finest success stories in the world of music publishing and composing for more than 60 years. Perhaps the most productive part of his career was his 21 years with The Big Three-Jack Robbins of Robbins & Feist, and the Sherman Clay and Miller Music catalogs. His accomplishments include the concept development of movie-title songs for "Three Coins In The Fountain," followed by "(Love Is) A Many-Splendored Thing" and "High Noon," among others. He was identified with the acquisition of such top hits as "The Woodpecker Song," "Moonlight Serenade," "Lucky Old Sun," "Laura" and dozens of others. He later joined The Richmond Organization and was responsible for a number of special projects, sharing Howie Richmond's

During his 20-year presidency of the Academy and the Songwriters Hall of Fame, the late Sammy Cahn (1913-1993) often said, "We exist to pay homage to songwriters—those gifted people who have given us so many pleasurable moments over the years. That's it! That's what we're all about." Born Samuel Cohn on New York's Lower East Side, he showed an aptitude for the violin that led to playing with small bands and his first collaborator, Saul Chaplin. Lyric writing was always a thrilling adventure for Cahn, who also worked with Jule Styne, Nicholas Brodszky, Alex Stordahl, Paul Weston, Vernon Duke, Sammy Fain and Jimmy Van Heusen. His partnership with publisher Lou Levy lasted many years, with "Rhythm Is Our Business" for Jimmy Lunceford's Orchestra being the first of many ASCAP copyrights. Among regular customers were Glen Gray and Tommy Dorsey, which led to Frank Sinatra, for whom he wrote "All The Way" during what Cahn called "the enduring and perhaps most satisfying relationship of my lyric-writing career.'

By his own admission, Howard Spencer Richmond is completely tone-deaf, yet The Richmond Organization (TRO), the music-publishing company he organized in 1949, became one of the most successful independent firms in the business. His involvement as a co-founder of the NAPM and the Songwriters' Hall of Fame came from a deep feeling of injustice to songwriters who had written well-known songs but got little credit for their achievements. Prior to publishing, he was

Well-known songwriter Bobby Weinstein, an active member of the Academy and Songwriters Hall of Fame for many years, is the current president and CEO. With BMI for more than 20 years, as VP of writer/publisher relations he worked with and advised songwriters and publishers on many issues. As a writer, his standards include "Goin' Out Of My Head" and "Hurt So Bad," and he was nominated for a Grammy in 1983 for Deniece Williams' recording of "It's Gonna Take A Miracle." Weinstein has produced recordings, hosted seminars on a variety of musical subjects, taught songwriting at various workshops and helped the elderly who have an interest in songwriting at New York senior-citizens' centers and homes for the aged. He is currently spearheading the campaign for a permanent Songwriters' Hall of Fame Museum and Web site ar-helping writers today: programs for professionals

BY MELINDA NEWMAN

s anyone who has tried it can attest, songwriting can be an extremely lonely profession. The National Academy Of Popular Music makes the endeavor a little less so through its workshops and showcases.

At the same time, the programs have brought new blood into the organization

"When Sammy Cahn asked me to move over here [from the Songwriters Guild], it was with a mandate to attract younger songwriters," says Bob Leone, projects director of the organization for the past 11 years. "There were 400 members, and the median age was 65; we now have 1,200 members, and the median age is in the late 20s, early 30s.

In 1989, Leone launched the Songwriters' Workshop program, dedicated to helping writers—amateur and pro—hone their craft. In the past 10 years, the NAPM has sponsored 186 workshops attended by more than 2,600 students, according to Leone. Four different 10-week workshops are offered: "Of Passions Add Profession: The Fully Expressed Songwriter" teaches writers how to blend art and commerce; "Inside Out" is a comprehensive look at pop songwriting from the industry's point of view; "Songwriting: The Craft & The Business" is for writers of all levels and features song critiques by experts, and "Songwriter Master Class" is for experienced songwriters who need a little extra nudge.

DAY JOBS AND DREAMS

The master classes are the only ones that require song samples from applicants. Except for "Inside Out," the workshops are taught by professional songwriters. The workshops, which cost $175, are open to members only, but Leone says there's never been a problem drawing attendes. "We don't advertise or promote them in any way. It's all word-of-mouth, but I do have contacts at SESAC, ASCAP, BMI and NARAS, and they funnel people to us.

The majority of attendees have day jobs but dream of hitting the top of the charts. "Many of them are performing songwriters, but they aren't being paid," says Leone. "Very few of them are making money from song royalties at that point, although there are some who are in the master program who have had some cuts.

Indeed, some writers use the workshops to help them shift gears. Amy Powers, a Harvard-trained lawyer who quit practicing to become a songwriter, had already written the lyrics to the Broadway musical "Sunset Blvd." by the time she took the NAPM workshop. "I started out as a musicaltheater lyricist, so I was leaping complete-ly into pop music," says Powers. "Because of the songwriter showcases, I became involved in country music, so I was into pop, pop/R&B and then country; there was more than one genre

I was working in. While songwriters may cover the entire spectrum of popular songwriting, the workshops don't break down by genre. "Songwriting is songwriting," says Leone. "From the beginning, the focus has been on the principles of good songwriting. It doesn't matter what genre you're working in. A lot of instructors will analyze hit songs, and how that will change [as the charts change], but the classes don't change much. SPECIAL GUESTS

One year after bowing the workshops, Leone introduced quarterly songwriter showcases in 1990. The 30th showcase will be held on June 24.

Just like the workshops, the showcases are primarily for upand-coming artists, but every now and then Leone does make an exception and accept someone who already has a record deal. "It has to be a special cir-cumstance," Leone says. "The last showcase, I featured Jean Norris from the Motown group Zhane. She does virtually none of the writing for the group and wanted to showcase her own music, but the focus is on picking songs that are commercial and fresh."

On average, Leone says he receives between 70 and 100 submissions per showcase, from which eight writers are selected to perform two songs each. Leone screens all the tapes and then calls in an expert panel to weed the best 20 down to eight. If the writer is not also a performer, he or she can have someone else perform the material.

Among the songwriters who have made the cut and have gone on to greater glory include Joan Osborne, Karen-Taylor Good and Collin Ray.

Leone says the showcases, which are open to the public, generally draw around 400 attendees, including many fellow songwriters, publishers, producers and managers. For many songwriters, it's Leone's care that makes the programs so special.

Songwriter Mark Schoenfeld and his writing partner Barri McPherson submitted an eightminute song for the songwriters' showcase to Leone in 1995. "It was called 'Brooklyn,' and it was about a girl named 'Brooklyn,' not the city,' says Schoenfeld. "Bob told us he wanted us to perform it at a showcase, but that he thought it was a movie, not just a song. He used all his connections, and he had the foresight to see what it was. By the time the showcase came around eight weeks later, we had a movie deal." Director Stephen Herek ("Mr. Holland's Opus") and his wife, producer Lori Herek, optioned the song for a film. In the meantime, the tune has been produced as a play in Los Angeles.

The great thing about Bob is that, even though our song was eight minutes long and different, he jumped on it and opened every door and pumped us full of enthusiasm," continues Schoenfeld. "When he saw something a little over the top, a little outrageous, it didn't scare him. Instead, he went way out of his way for us."

time, we used to have classes and songwriter performances—Sammy [Cahn] and Jule Styne and Cy Coleman and Burton Lane would entertain people. Then the Board Of Education would bus in students to get a handle on what people like Eubie Blake wrote, to explain who it was whose bust was on display. This took us into the early '80s. Sammy continued trying to find another location, but after several attempts, nothing materialized.

And you're still looking for a place in New York.

We prefer to keep it in New York City because it's the home of Tin Pan Alley, the Brill Building and 1650 Broadway—another famous publishing/songwriter hangout, where Teddy Randazzo and I wrote our first hit song, "Pretty Blue Eyes," the first hit for Steve Lawrence without Eydie Gorme. Then there's the Basin Street jazz club, where jazz originated, Birdland and Harlem, man! New York's where it belongs!

So what's the problem?
People ask, "What happened to the museum?" and it's hard to come up with an answer time after time after trying things that didn't work. Some other people have hung carrots in front of us: We've been invited to Johnny Mercer's hometown, Savanah, Ga., by the mayor, and to Long Island and Hoboken-but I want it to be in Manhattan.

The most recent idea was the BMG building on 46th and Broadway: There was space, and we spoke with the reps, but they wanted to know how much money we had-and we didn't have the money. What we need to stay in New York is a benefactor or an organization to step up to the plate and say, "What do you mean, there's no Songwriters' Hall of Fame in New York?" Talk about frustration! I have tried so many roads to Rome, I may need to make a new road! But we're still doing it, and we have a lot of good people

Are you making any use of the new information technologies?

We're looking to hire an expert research person in the next couple of months to create profiles of our inductees for our Web site. We have over 300 in-depth studies on all of them to put on our "Web site museum," if you will, because that's a do-able thing.

What other activities are planned for the future?

We want more than just the one large induction event every year, which is produced in such a tight time space that we can't get in everything we want because it runs too late. Like this year marks Fred Astaire's and Duke Ellington's 100th birthdays—and the millennium—so it makes sense to have an event for people turning 100 this year, because we can't cram it into the induction. So we're planning for an extra event.

The Songwriters' Hall of Fame, then, seems pretty healthy.

The health of the organization is incredible. We're doing more than we've ever done, with the most interested and creative and enthusiastic board of directors that we've ever had. My own enthusiasm is unlimited. My wife and I keep a "dream book" that we started years ago, where we took a book of blank pages and, whenever we find a picture of something we like, we paste it in. Like a picture of a yacht, or a beach with palm trees, a nice car, even a saying or a poem. And we started filling the book some years ago, and everything we put in the book has come true in our livesall of it and then some! But I discovered recently, while having a conversation with Howie Richmond, that I never pasted a picture of the Songwriters' Hall of Fame's "temple" logo in the book!

So I went home and immediately cut out the logo and pasted it in the book, and your guess is as good as mine! If it works, I'll paste in a lottery ticket! But I have every hope the Hall of Fame will happen, if not in my time then in somebody's, because too many people are interested in getting it together. We just haven't found the right source. But all we have to do is keep doing what we're doing in putting our name out there in places where somebody can see it and find out we need their support and help.

The SHOF MUSEUM project is seeking a site—both physical and virtual—for its collection of priceless artifacts.

by Steve Traiman

he first Songwriters' Hall of Fame (SHOF) Museum was an idea that founders Howie Richmond, Abe Olman and Johnny Mercer had envisioned when the National Academy Of Popular Music (NAPM) was launched in 1969.

When Sammy Cahn took over as president in 1973, he got very interested in making the idea a reality. As songwriter/folklorist Oscar Brand recalls, "Sammy and Jule Styne went to see New York's then-mayor Abe Beame with a mockup of the museum concept. Two days after a photo of their meeting appeared in all the papers, they were contacted by Alex Parker, a great pop-songwriter fan who had just bought the One Times Tower building in Times Square. It was the center of the mythical music marketplace called Tin Pan Alley.

"He had an open eighth floor in the building with about 3,500 square feet and wanted a good organization as a tenant. He knew that music people would congregate there and bring a lot of good attention to the space, so he cleared the floor and gave us a $1-a-year lease for the Museum. He also supplied the rugs from his basement storage area and some basic furniture to get us going."

VALLEE'S MEGAPHONE

Songwriter Anna Sosenko, who wrote "Darling Je Vous Aime Beaucoup" among other hits, was brought in for her many contacts to help install the Museum. Brand himself, a former ship's carpenter, put up the moldings and hung photos and plaques. He became Museum curator, and, with Sosenko, got to work on acquiring exhibits.

Rudy Vallee walked into the empty space and asked her, "What do you want?" He then gave one of his first megaphones. Other early donations included a replica of Judy Garland's ruby shoes from "The Wizard Of Oz," Sammy Calm's typewriter, on which he turned out many hits, and his Oscar for "Three Coins In The Fountain"; a treasured letter to Brand from Woody Guthrie, Victor Herbert's stand-up desk and George Gershwin's sit-down desk from the Library Of Congress, several Johnny Mercer paintings, fedoras from Jinmy Durante and Frank Sinatra, Gene Kelly's dancing shoes from "An American In Paris," a guitar pick from Elvis Presley, Fred Astaire's top hat and gold-headed cane, an authentic Thomas Edison wind-up phonograph and the original sheet music for Woody Guthrie's "This Land Is Your Land" with the original title, "God Blessed America For Me."

Also included were a unique diorama of "Tin Pan Alley" in

Also included were a unique diorama of "Tin Pan Alley" in the form of an upright piano with a 3-D montage of the mythical area across the front of the upright section. Composer collages were produced by collage artist Hans Hirschfeld for Sammy Cahn, Duke Ellington, Ira Gershwin and Jule Styne, among many others.

The official opening came in 1973 with a gala honoring 53 "Women Who Wrote The Songs." "They were all so pleased to be there," Brand says. "We had Maye Boren Axton ["Heartbreak Hotel"], Ann Ronell ["Willow Weep For Me"], Carole King, Carolyn Leigh and Betty Comden, among many others."

SITTING IN WITH GERSHWIN

Bertie Pilgrim, who appeared in Eubie Blake's first Broadway show, was the first docent, welcoming kids, tourists and many music-industry visitors. The Museum had a "hands-on" room for kids, with a popular song quiz, and a small stage and portable seating for all types of events. Visitors could sit at Gershwin's desk and use a memo pad imprinted with "A note from the desk of George Gershwin."

"Over the decade the Museum was open, we had auditions, tryouts, rehearsals, TV filmings, birthday parties, recitals and a lot of other wonderful times," Brand says. "Frank Sinatra became the 'chairman of the board,' the only group he ever lent his name to for that position."

When the building was sold in 1983, the Museum lost its space, and the priceless collection of songwriter artifacts and memorabilia was placed into high-security storage after a detailed inventory by Randy Poe.

The archives, consisting of songwriter information, sheet

The archives, consisting of songwriter information, sheet music, books, recordings and tapes, have been indexed and are stored at C.W. Post College in Long Island University. Archivist professor Dave Jasen is heading up the computerization of all materials so that everyone will be able to retrieve the information on a future SHOF Web site.

"We have agreements with virtually all the important music archives, so that we'll have one central source for every American song and every songwriter," Brand says. "These include ASCAP, BMI, SESAC, Yale University for Cole Porter, the Country Music Hall of Fame and the Cowboy Hall of Fame."

GET 'EM ON THE NET

Howie Richmond has offered to underwrite the Web site project through fund-raising efforts. "For me, it's a big thing to see how the Academy and the Hall of Fame have come to exist and prosper," he says. "While we look for a new Museum site, the Web site is a prime objective, and we're going to find a way to collect all the funds necessary to get our songs and songwriters on the Internet."

The Web site will let researchers and scholars instantly retrieve hard-to-locate information and give music fans access to information on any song in which they have an interest.

For the new Museum, Richmond envisages "a physical home in New York City, where it belongs. It will be a modern treasury of musical history and entertainment." On Brand's list are space for a permanent stage and theater/concert hall, a viewing area for films and videos, a listening room for historic vinyl, tape and CD recordings, a permanent exhibit area for memorabilia and another area for changing, topical exhibits.

"All the Academy's energy is currently channeled for the Web site and permanent Museum," Brand emphasizes. "With the help of the industry and popular-music fans everywhere, we know we will accomplish both objectives."

The National Academy Of Popular Music

Greetings to Our Friends in Music:

We're all tremendously proud of our first 30 wonderful, exciting and fruitful years.

We've enshrined over 300 of the greatest songwriters of the world.

We've extended our special accolades to scores of other men and women who have made their own unique contributions to music.

Here's to our next 30 years of opportunity and accomplishment and many more to come!

Thanks to our friends everywhere. You helped make it all possible. Together, we've all worked to make it a richly rewarding moment in time for the artform we all love, songwriting!

Cordially.

Internet's Impact On Retail Examined At ICSC Convention

BY EARL PAIGE

LAS VEGAS—The impact of the Internet on retail shopping centers emerged as a key theme at the International Council of Shopping Centers (ICSC) Convention last month here.

It was pointed out that some brick-and-mortar retailers are starting to adopt the tactics of Web sites, especially in offering themed shopping and adding interactivity. Those that have not undertaken these moves were urged to do so.

"People don't buy products and services; they buy experiences," retail specialist Barbara Ashley, president of Retail Ventures Inc., a consulting firm based in Bloomfield Hills, Mich., told those at a crowded seminar here.

Concerned about the impact of the Internet on their businesses, brick-and-mortar retailers—many with Web sites of their own—listened closely when Utah Gov. Michael Leavitt attacked sales-tax inequities during the conference's opening meeting.

ICSC retail and real estate members were upbeat, though, despite continuing challenges and pressures. In recent years, these pressures have caused a number of music chains to file for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection or embark on store-closing campaigns.

of Shopping Centers

Quintard Center in Oxford, Miss., had its size doubled in an expansion. Quintard is "75% rented even though it doesn't open until August 2000," she boasted. Among the businesses that have leased space is Sound Shop, a Nashville-based music chain.

This optimism was reflected in opening remarks by ICSC president John Riordan, who said that the convention—held May 23-27 at the Las Vegas Hilton—had its highest-ever attendance, up 11% to 29,000, boosted by a membership that now exceeds 38,000; and that 200 exhibitors had been added to the two show floors, to make a total of 500 booths.

Riordan also said that retailers are being very realistic, without having "grandiose ideas, ambitions, or plans." He added, "Success will come from tending the garden rather than planting new fields."

Terry Woodward, president of the Owensboro, Ky.-based Disk Jockey, said, "At 124 stores, we are concentrating on renovation and expansion of what we have." Some stores are going from 2,300 square feet to 10,000 square feet or more.

Film-Poster Exhibit Features Rockwell, Struzan

BY CATHERINE APPLEFELD OLSON WASHINGTON, D.C.—Most people associate Norman Rockwell with the images of Americana he created for The Saturday Evening Post. What many might not know is that between 1941 and 1966, the illustrator also created posters for six motion pictures, providing an illustrated persona for films ranging from "Stagecoach" to "The Razor's Edge" to "Cinderfella."

In a bid to embrace a broad spectrum of illustration and attract a new generation of art appreciators, the Norman Rockwell Museum in Stockbridge, Mass., this summer will stage exhibitions of Rockwell's film posters and selected works of the contemporary film poster illustrator Drew Struzan. "Drew—Art Of The Cinema" and "Hooray For Rockwell's Hollywood" will run June 11-Oct. 31.

"These images have such resonance in contemporary culture," says Stephanie Plunkett, museum curator of illustration, about illustrated movie posters. "Someone who has lived with a reproduction for so long can come and see what an original looks like and get a feeling for the artist's process."

The Struzan exhibition comprises 51 finished paintings and 15 preparatory works, culled from the more than 150 film posters he created during the past 20-plus years. It includes original paintings he created for "Star Wars," "The Empire Strikes Back," "Return Of The Jedi," "Indiana Jones And The Temple Of Doom," "E.T.: The Extra-Terrestrial," and, in what's bound to generate attention, "Star Wars Episode I: The Phantom Menace."

While museum officials hope the shows will provide a chance to celebrate the visual communication of movie poster illustration through the years, Struzan says they also will provide another poignant function: the documentation of a dying art.

"This show is about a period in history that came and went, and my feeling is it is not coming back," says Struzan. "There was a time when I did 12 to 20 movie posters per year. I've done two in the past five years." Struzan says that, for better or worse, the computer has changed the direction of image-making. "It is not even on people's minds to use an artist anymore," he says. "They believe it takes more time to use an artist and that an image is cheaper."

While Struzan's images may resonate with the public, he and other current artists often work in relative anonymity, particularly compared with those from Rockwell's era.

"One of the things that strikes me about artists today is that their names are largely unknown," says museum director Laurie Norton Moffatt. "In Rockwell's day, the print medium was everything. He and everyone like him became celebrities. For Norman Rockwell to put his name to something was a very prestigious thing."

Although Rockwell lived in New York, he spent a good deal of time in Los Angeles during the mid-30s while he was courting his second wife and made connections in the entertainment industry. "Movie posters were a lively commission for him," Moffatt says. "He enjoyed them in that they were a little outside the magazine-publishing mode."

Other film posters to feature Rockwell's work are "The Song Of Bernadette," "The Magnificent Ambersens," and "Along Came Jones."

Survey Shows Swedish Web Usage Surpasses That Of U.S.

U.S. CONSUMERS are wired for the Web, either at home or in the office, but what about their counterparts overseas? One recent survey indicates that Europeans may be ahead of Americans when it comes to the Internet.

Through a licensing agreement with Swedish company SIFO Interactive, Media Metrix, which measures Web site usage in the U.S., has released the first Internet ratings outside the U.S.

There are some striking results from this survey. First of all, it shows that the Internet has a nearly 50% penetration in Sweden, with about 3.5 million users on average each month. In the U.S.

the penetration rate, according to Media Metrix, is about 26%, which means that nearly twice as many Swedes, proportionally, as Americans are plugged in.

The gender breakdown is interesting, too. In the U.S. it's about 50-50 male-to-female. But in Sweden it's still the males who prefer the Web: 56.5% to 43.1% females.

What are the hot sites among Swedes? Their No. 1 Web site is Microsoft's msn.com, which drew 1.48 million visitors in April. Not too far behind is altavista. com, with 1.46 million visitors. Yahoo!, surprisingly, is only No. 16 in Sweden, with 482,000 visitors. In the U.S. Yahoo! generally ranks among the top three sites each month.

The most-visited music site among Swedish Net surfers is Real Networks' real.com, which drew 374,000 people. In the U.S., online retailer Amazon.com is the most-visited music site. But in Sweden, Amazon.com ranks only No. 44. with 232.000 visitors.

This will not be the final Webusage report from Europe. The company has announced the formation of Media Metrix Europe, covering the U.K., France, and Germany

Criminal Builds An Alt/Punk Record

Atlanta Retailer Draws Customers With Comics, Music

BY CHRIS MORRIS

ATLANTA-When Eric Levin, owner of the local alternative rock and comics haven Criminal Records, first established his store in 1990 in Daytona Beach, Fla., it was known as Secret Service Records. Then, a mishap

"Three months into using the name Secret Service, I was arrested by the Secret Service,' Levin says.

A federal law prohibits businesses from using the name, since it may interfere with the government agency's ability to protect the president of the United States by confusing the citizenry.

Levin says the bust "got a lot of press at the time-it was [covered by] Associated Press and UPI, all the news stations. In fact, the name Criminal Records came from a very snarky newscaster who [said], 'Ha ha ha, what's he gonna call it now, Criminal Records?' By the end of the week, I had the T-shirts printed up and the new sign. Criminal Records has existed ever since."

When Levin moved to Atlanta in 1991, he set up Criminal Records in a 1,100-square-foot location in the city's bohemian enclave, Little Five Points. Five years ago, it relocated to its current strip-mall site in the same part of town.

Criminal's focus on alternative rock is reflective of Levin's own obsessions.

"That's where my passions lie," he says. "I saw a need [in Atlanta]. I saw the types of stores I was familiar with, like the classic rock stores, the old vinyl stores that have been selling black Siouxsie Sioux T-shirts for 15, 20 years and Styx records, Atlanta had a lot of those. This was pre-grunge, and my store in Florida had always concentrated on that movement as it began and just whatever was alternative or punk at that time.'

He adds, "When I moved to Atlanta and started to shop for my own personal stack of comics, I didn't like any of the comic shops ... I really thought that Atlanta, as well as needing a kind of hip, quick-moving record store, needed a comic shop."

Criminal's inventory is also [name]. That's been a struggle. Maybe it's my own perception, but I look [at our store], and there's no vinyl in the record store, and I think that something's wrong. But it was an olive branch from the new guy.

The neighboring store, the Junkman's Daughter, does a large business in T-shirts, stickers, and paraphernalia—and is Criminal's landlord.

"I wish that my neighbor wasn't the owner of the building, and that my lease doesn't state that I can't sell stickers," Levin says. "I

largely determined by its location. The store sells no vinylmainly because Wax 'N' Facts. Atlanta's long-established vinyl specialist, is located a mere block Levin says, "[I said,] 'They're not selling comic books, they're not selling magazines, they're not doing a good job on CDs.' It seemed obvious that that's what I needed to do. At the same time, being a little punk rock record store, where's the vinyl? It was a little disconcerting, especially with Criminal Records in the can't sell basically what they're selling, [and unfortunately] that's the profit center at most record stores. I was eager enough to get into this new building that I don't think my foresight was in place. But at the time, I wasn't interested in T-shirts, I wasn't interested in stickers.'

However, Criminal has managed to do a strong business concentrating on CDs and printed matter.

While Levin cannot estimate the number of titles he stocks, he estimates the value of his inventory at $800,000. He says the store netted $850,000 in 1998 and adds, "All the projections look good for hitting a million [dollars net] in '99."

Criminal's late-May best sellers reflect the store's modern rock and electronica customer base: Its top titles included current releases by local band Floraline, Me First & the Gimme Gimmes, Elf Power, Tortoise & the Ex, Fantomas, Sasha, Mike Ness, Kruder & Dorfmeister, Thievery Corporation, and Godspeed You Black Emperor.

Georgia State University's 100,000-watt station WRAS has had a role in one current Criminal hit: After the station began playing the Japanese pub-punk band Thee Michelle Gun Elephant, Levin began buying the group's import Triad/Heat Wave album "Gear Blues" direct, and it has been a recent fixture on the outlet's best-seller list.

Levin says Criminal does in-store appearances "whenever it's right." Popular right." draws have included the Cardigans, Soul Coughing, the Squirrel Nut Zippers, Meat Puppets, Weezer, Beck, Alejandro Escovedo, and Mark Eitzel.

In late May, on the first weekend that "The Phantom Menace" was in theaters, Criminal mounted an appearance by the "Star Wars"-themed local band Grand Moff Tarkin. "It was stellar," Levin says. "The cops came. It was everything I want an in-store to be.'

CDs-which are stocked in glass cases to prevent shrinkage-account for 70% of Criminal's business, with comics and periodicals making up 25%. However, Levin says that the comics market has softened in recent years, and that, although he stocks some back issues, he does little business with anything except current titles.

"[Comics customers] don't have that fever of collectibility that was present during the Death Of Superman' craze [in the mid-'90s]," he says. "We really reaped some rewards from and some increased traffic, some great publicity. But then a year after that, when everybody realized those 20 that bagged issues of comics didn't rise in value, that corner of the market completely abandoned comics.

Levin began stocking DVD video in late 1998, and it accounts for only 5% of his sales. He says, "I'm just following my passions. Right now, my passion happens to be movies, so,

Criminal Records has no Internet presence at the moment. Levin explains, "The Web's never worked for me. We had a site four years ago that I wanted to be more entertaining than commerce-driven, and that was a mistake. I could never invest enough time or money in it."

Levin sees one possible future profit center in his CD magazine You Are Here, which is now in its sixth issue and is distributed free to customers. The product, which began life as a 12-page photocopied newsletter sent to the 4,000 people on Criminal's mailing list, now comprises a 24-page "magazine" booklet and a 19track CD featuring songs by top alternative and dance talents. The written material is edited by store manager Lillian Lai, while the mix-style CD is assembled by employee Caesar Ramirez, under his DJ name "Spaceboy Swivel."

"We don't accept submissions," Levin says of the music. "We pick the bands, and then we start looking for the [label] money. It is a sponsorship . . . We've called it everything from an ad to a sponsorship to a track on a CD. Basically, we're just trying to recoup our costs, and the labels understand that . . . it's a value-added."

The current issue of You Are Here is available at 15 member outlets of the Coalition of Independent Music Stores. "The deal, for them to get it for free for their customers, is that they have to do a buy-in price and positioning," says Levin.
"The whole idea is to take it

Coalition-wide—and then some," he adds. "I spoke with the Newbury [Comics] people [in Boston], and I want to see it in there—a separate print run with their logo on it, in those stores, and I want to continue to grow it.

The magazine's most entertaining continuing feature offers reviews of the album tracks 'written" by characters from Cartoon Network's loopy show "Cartoon Planet." (Cartoon Network director of programming Mike Lazzo, a Criminal customer, suggested the feature.) The comments of Space Ghost's evil, acerbic mantis sidekick Zorak in the fourth issue struck a few nerves.

'[Zorak] didn't like anything, and that was the joke," Levin says with a chuckle. "Here's a cartoon space villain who doesn't like your record. Of course, all the bands loved it, and all the managers hated it. I got so much fuckin' shit. I could have killed the project there, because everybody got the finger. I was just like, 'Look, if you're going to get upset about a cartoon space villain, fuck you. Don't call me back.'

"There is a strange line between these guys paying us and editorial content, but it is what it is. I'm not running The New York

Trans World Lands A Joan Jett Exclusive; Stores Pull Godsmack

SPOTLIGHT: Joan Jett dares to tread where Cheap Trick recently faltered. It seems that since mid-April, Trans World Entertainment Corp. has been carrying an exclusive on a new Joan Jett & the Blackhearts album called "Fetish." The album, which is labeled as a limited edition, carries a $10.99 price in the chain's stores. The album is going into general distribution, through the Island Def Jam Group, on Tuesday (8).

Naturally, some retailers are miffed that Trans World has been getting an advantage over them. Indeed, Trans World itself was in a similar state of mind when Cheap Trick gave an exclusive to Amazon.com for its "Music For Hangovers" album.

How did this latest situation come about? Unclear.

Kenny Laguna, Joan Jett's manager, was out of the country, so no answer is forthcoming from him. Island Def Jam executives decline to comment, and Trans World needn't comment. They were just being aggressive, and bless them for that.

But sources say Laguna apparently had a new Jett track, "Fetish," and built an album around a sex theme, using old Jett tunes and cover songs. He wasn't planning to make the album available for general release and is said to have gone straight to Trans World and cut the deal.

The "Fetish" track started to get some airplay, and that prompted Island Def Jam, which doesn't profit one jota from the Trans World exclusive to initiate discussions about making the album available for general release. I don't know who thought of this, but the album version coming out

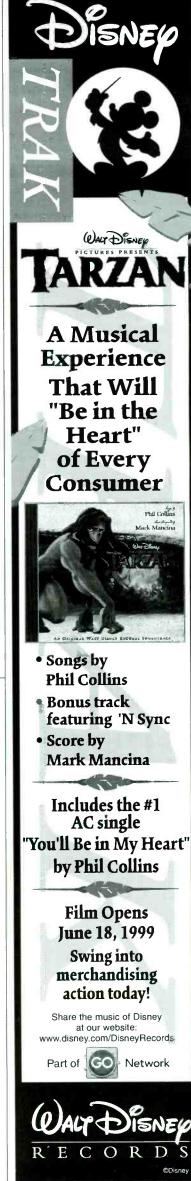

Tuesday contains an extra track, which is a pretty good idea if you are trying to mollify some annoyed merchants.

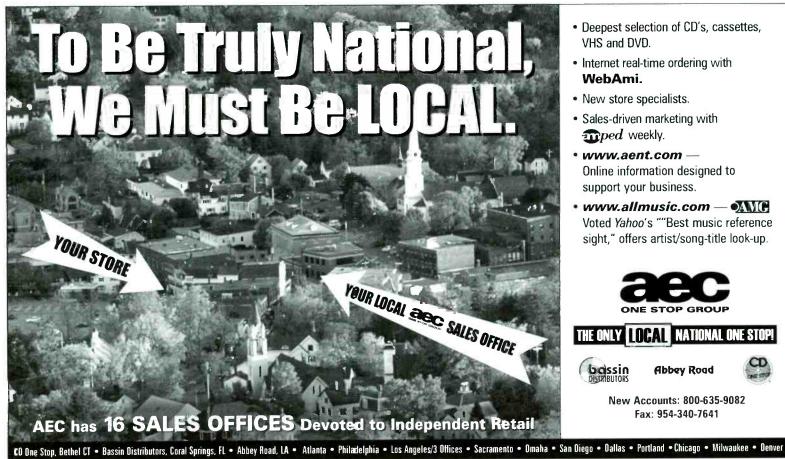

VORE SPOT-

LIGHT: Kevin Clarke, a resident of Mentor, Ohio, has apparently campaigned successfully to get a Godsmack album pulled from the shelves of Wal-Mart and Kmart.

Clarke complains that the album, which has been out for nine months. contains profanity and satanic references, according to press reports. A Universal Music spokesman didn't return phone calls for comment, but at press time sources say that executives at the Universal Records label were discussing whether they should sticker the album, issue a clean version, or just let the album stand as it is now.

Clarke says he is not on a crusade. "I just want Universal to act responsibly, as many record labels do, and put a sticker on the album. If they do this, we can all call it a day and go home.

But Leavitt warned that the salestax inequity "will get out of hand and that E-commerce could reshape the economy, affecting 32,000 U.S. tax-collecting institutions," referring to local, state, and federal governments.

To illustrate his point, he said he recently made a $44.50 purchase "while visiting California from a New York-based Web site with shipping from New Jersey, and I consumed it in Utah—four states that did not collect sales tax."

'Discount Web site prices are undermining consumer trust in traditional stores'

The following day, a large audience at a panel heard moderator Stephen Finn of accounting firm Ernst & Young say that 1998 Ecommerce totaling $10 billion amounted to $700 million in lost sales tax and that online business is expected to grow to $100 billion in 2003, which would mean a tax loss of $7 billion.

Leavitt said he has purchased goods from Amazon.com and compared prices with a locally based store that has a Web site. "[Utah state] law states if a retailer has a physical presence in a state, it must collect sales tax on its Web sites, too. Amazon was cheaper because of ignoring sales tax."

"Discount Web site prices are undermining consumer trust in traditional stores," charged Joseph North Jr. of Honolulu's Retail Strategies. "Now people are saying, 'If the Web site can sell this cheap, we have been gouged and exploited all these years.'"

Scott Thomas of Scott Thomas Construction in Williamsburg, Va., said the Internet was seriously challenging home entertainment brick-and-mortar retail. "Records, videos, books, they're becoming commodities. That's the effect of the Internet. But you won't buy an expensive suit from a Web site. Record stores, video stores, bookstores—as we already see with Barnes & Noble—have to become more experiential. You have to offer people an experience."

Thomas also noted that merchants have to "be more interactive." He said that his wife, a college professor, "will go out of her way to visit a Barnes & Noble for the Starbucks, and she usually ends up buying a book, record, or something."

Robert D. Lakeman, VP of marketing at Scott Thomas Construction, cited Virgin Megastore as a merchant that provides shoppers with an experience. He is not surprised that Virgin Megastore founder Richard Branson is one of 10 individuals singled out in a recommended new book, "Radical Marketing". Said Lakeman, "Richard Branson is in there because he breaks all the rules; he makes his own rules."

Nathan Freeman, principal of Figueroa Media Group, a Los Angeles firm involved in land-use development, was an advocate of "partnering" as the new strategy for home entertainment retailing. "We're seeing more and more of the Starbucks and Barnes & Noble[-type| partnering. We just did a [deal with] Chevron and McDonald's." Another example of the trend, he said, is "what Tower and the Good Guys! are doing with WOW! right here in Las Vegas."

Kerry Klarfeld, president of Klarfeld Real Estate in St. Louis, said that record stores in particular attract the younger, active demographic for the shopping centers his firm builds. He said he was at the convention scouting for deals with music chains.

Shawn Nourafshan of L.A.'s Reliable Properties, said he was impressed with Latin music merchant Ritmo Latino and Wherehouse Entertainment's Tu Musica as retailers that recognize the importance of ethnic targeting.

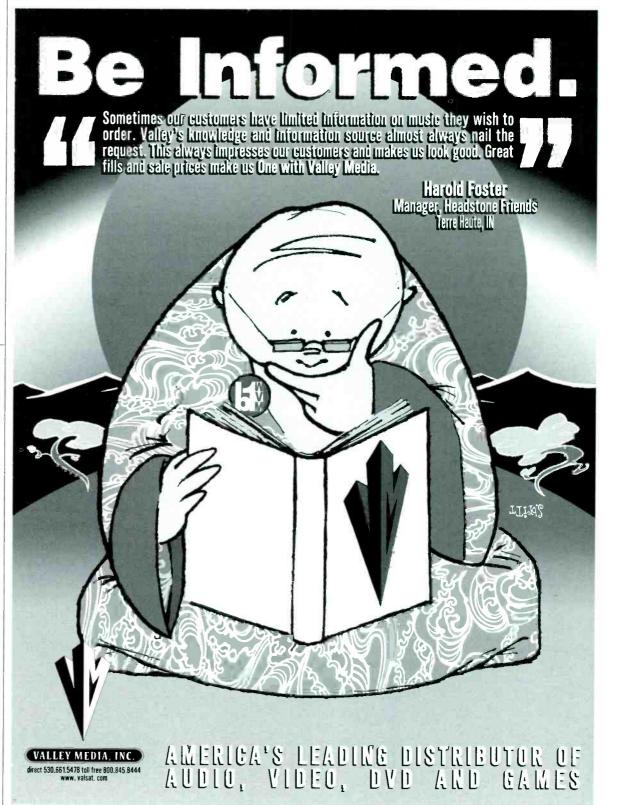

One of the more crowded and lively seminars was "Ethnic Marketing," at which panelists criticized the often-stereotypical thinking about the inner city. Moderator Curtis Fralin, VP of L.A.based CB Richard Ellis, said that he has seen the purchasing power of inner-city consumers increase 73% in the past 10 years.

The Internet buzz was heard in almost all seminars. During one on small retailing centers, Edward Paster, CEO of Paster Enterprises, said he realized what music merchants face when his young son called him to inquire about CD-

ROM drives because he wanted to download MP3 files to make his own CDs.

On the positive side of online commerce, a study quoted by Michael McCarty, senior VP/director of marketing research at the Indianapolis-based Simon Property Group, said that 51% of online purchases were made by people living in markets of 50,000 and fewer people. This could provide retailers with Web sites opportunities to expand their territory without building stores.

McCarty pointed out that in 1985, the "barbarian at the gate was Wal-Mart, but now it's the Internet. Any retailer who survived Wal-Mart will survive the Internet."

MTV Networks, MuchMusic Expanding Web Content Beyond Cross-Promotions

WEB STRATEGIES OF MUSIC NETS: Traditional music TV powerhouses MTV and MuchMusic are making moves to preserve and expand their established brands in the Internet space. While online traffic for both programmers benefits from cross-promotions on cable and satellite, there's no guarantee that on-air muscle will ultimately translate to the Internet in the face of aggressive new Web-specific music entrants, such as MP3.com (see chart).

To stay competitive, MTV is aiming to build a completely new site

'The Internet is allowing us to widen our reach to include all kinds of music'

- FRED SEIBERT -

that expands its online presence by moving beyond the preconceptions of the MTV brand, which has typically skewed to younger music consumers.

A beta version of the site, developed under the working title "The Buggles Project," will debut by mid-June. At the center of the project is a newly revised and re-branded Imagine Radio, which was purchased last year by MTV Networks parent company Viacom. Current rock, pop, and R&B offerings will be expanded to include music formats not generally associated with MTV, such as blues, reggae, Christian, and classical. "TV is truly a limited-bandwidth business," says Fred Seibert, president of the newly formed MTV Networks Online. "We are not allowed to do all the things that we want to in this space because it is just not economically viable. The Internet is allowing us to widen our reach to include all kinds of music. For example, MTV.com includes a lot of electronica, which we don't cover as much on TV . . . We have to use the Internet to extend our reach and brand beyond what TV can offer."

MTV's new Internet music service is "just the beginning" of the newly formed service, says Seibert.

The music video giant is also diversifving its online image by tapping into the established brand presence of its newly acquired TCI Digital online music properties SonicNet, Streamland, and Addicted to Noise (Billboard, May 29).

MTV Networks Online plans to continue to build these brands, rather than fold them into the wellestablished MTV banner, according to Seibert.

The technology arm of MTV Networks, which is expected to spin off into its own company in the coming months, will continue to build and diversify its highly trafficked MTV Online and VH1 Online sites with new content offerings, according to Seibert. Both sites are continuing to shift further away from a purely promotional presence to original content.

"Up until now, all of our companies have been operated as promotional vehicles to draw attention to what is going on at our TV networks," he says. "But that is changing."

Canadian music video giant Much-Music is also adjusting to the changing demands of music consumers via its Web site. CityInteractive, which develops the MuchMusic.com site, has seen a significant growth in streaming media and downloadable content over the past year, according to City-Interactive GM Josh Raphaelson.

"We are looking at a lot of new portal and affiliate possibilities," says Raphaelson, who aims to tap into consumer demand for MuchMusic's extensive archive of music and interview content.

For example, the site is teaming with Woodstock.com for a co-branded Web site that will contain archived and live streaming performances from the forthcoming Woodstock Music & Arts Festival, to be held July 23-25 in Rome, N.Y. Among the acts expected to be featured are Aerosmith, the Dave Matthews Band, Metallica, Sheryl Crow, and Alanis Morissette.

The company is also anxious to explore the promotional use of digitally downloadable music.

"[Digitally distributed music] is incredibly efficient and opens new possibilities for us in artist, label, and consumer relationships," says Raphaelson.

MuchMusic.com is tapping into the existing label relationships of the MuchMusic TV network to further promote music via the Net.

The company has seen "a sizable increase in the amount of support we get from the labels," says Raphaelson. "Just in the last year, we've become known as a strong 'viral' marketing agent for new releases and breaking bands. The labels see spikes in their Web traffic and trace the audience back to MuchMusic.

RIFFAGE.COM DEBUTS: Former Diamond Multimedia executive Ken Wirt has founded the new digital download venture Riffage.com. The company aims to establish a leading consumer portal to downloadable music via MP3 and other technolo-Riffage.com will sell downloadable music, physical CDs, and artist merchandise on the site, which debuts Monday (7). The company is aiming to lure musicians to the site by giving them 85% of proceeds from each sale of their music and merchandise.

Riffage.com competes with several established music sites that already offer digital download sales, including MP3.com, Emusic, and Tunes.com. However, unlike these sites, Riffage.com will rely heavily on the use of personalization technologies that suggest new artists to Web users based on their previous music choices, according to Wirt, who is CEO of the Palo Alto, Calif.based company.

Rather than rely on a traditional fulfillment company (such as Valley or Alliance), Riffage.com is turning to a new fulfillment center run by the Navajo Nations. The unconventional fulfillment center is based on a Navajo Indian reservation in Leupp, Åriz.

Riffage.com will be promoted in bundled software contained in the packaging of new Diamond Rio portable music devices.

MUSIC GETS ROSENBLATT: Former Geffen Records chief Eddie Rosenblatt has joined the board of directors for Emusic.com, the company formerly known as Goodnoise. In related news, Emusic has signed a licensing agreement with the King Riscuit Entertainment Group, More than 60 full albums will be released for digital download as part of the deal, including releases from America, Bachman Turner Overdrive, David Crosby, Iggy Pop, and Kansas.

ZIP DISK MUSIC FORMAT DEBUTS: In one of the stranger new-media music developments, the online label Atomic Pop will make the new Public Enemy album, "There's A Poison Goin' On," available on an Iomega Zip disk for $16.98. The format, which has primarily been used as a large-capacity storage medium, is used by approximately 23 million computer

In addition to the album, the music video of the single "Do You Wanna Go Our Way???" is included. The disk will be sold on the label's Web site, as well as at brick-and-mortar stores.

ARTISTDIRECT GETS $15 MIL-LION: Internet music company ARTISTdirect has secured $15 million in private funding from Chase Capital, Bowman Capital, Cassandra Capital, Constellation Ventures, and Flatiron Partners.

The funds will be used to build branding and further expand the company, according to Marc Geiger, president of ARTISTdirect, which runs official Web sites for the Rolling Stones, the Beastie Boys, Beck, Tom Petty, and the Backstreet Boys.

Geiger declines to comment on when the Encino, Calif.-based company plans to file for an initial public offering, which sources say is due later this year.

CDs Provided Infrastructure For DVD Manufacturing, But A Multi-Format World Means Complications

BY DAN DALEY

n the beginning there was... Well, there was light, of sorts. But it was expensive and cumbersome. The early days of CD manufacturing, which began commercially in 1982, were characterized by huge—and hugely expensive—machinery and specialized environments. Batch-based manufacturing operations were housed in massive clean rooms, and the initial investment in a single manufacturing line for the compact disc was upwards of $7 million. Within a decade, however, the industry had transitioned to in-line manufacturing, with monoline-type systems that essentially contained their own mini—clean rooms to counter contamination of the polycarbonate raw material as it transitioned from tiny pellets into disc, and which now routinely cost less than $1 million.

As the technology changed, so did the operation of the machinery. What was once a NASA-like exercise populated by scientists in white lab coats is now an almost fully automated process, with a single operator running four lines simultaneously. Overall, the evolution of the CD-manufacturing process is a classic example of a typical technology metamorphosis from specialized product to commodity.

That experience should, then, outline the future course of DVD. And to a degree, it will. However, DVD presents a much more challenging scenario for several reasons.

NOT AS EASY AS IT LOOKS

First, it has many faces, with five subvariants of the basic premise (DVD-5, 10, 9, 14 and 18), plus DVD-Audio and Divx, a variant that uses a specialized locking feature on the content that can be unlocked—and thus played—via modem commands to a specialized player upon payment by the viewer, and Sony's forthcoming Super Audio CD (SACD). Secondly, DVD will have to continue to evolve in a very different economic environment than did the CD. Consumers will have to be educated as to the tremendous differences between CD and DVD, an issue complicated by the physical similarity between the two, and they will have to find their way through the thicket of formats that DVD brings with it. The concept of the disc is there, a link through time and space. But the similarities end there.

"The CD experience of the last 15 years definitely provides an infrastructure for the manufacturing of DVDs and is critical in helping the manufacturing community make the transition to DVD," agrees Bill Mueller, VP of operations at Warner Advanced Media Operations (WAMO). "And that experience in molding and sputtering means a lot. But the differences between the two are just as dramatic."

The biggest difference between CD and DVD is in critical tolerances. DVD's massively larger storage capacities—between 4.7 GB for DVD-5 and up to 17.1 GB for DVD-18 versus 650 MB for the CD—means that DVD's pit size (the small indentations that create the 0-1/on-off basis for

Advent Of DVD's Various Subformats Is Just A Precursor To Even More

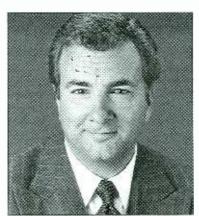

BY DAN DALEY

f the political and technical jockeying that preceded the arrival of DVD into the consumer marketplace two years ago can be viewed as foreplay, then the courtship period proved to be a fecund one. DVD-which most consumers are still somewhat baffled by, despite the 4 millionplus players and 35 million discs already sold—is not an only child; there are three basic types that are already available for video and ROM applications: DVD-5 (singlesided, single-density; 4.7 GB capacity), DVD-10 (double-sided, single-density; 9.4 GB capacity) and DVD-9 (a single-sided, doubledensity disc; 8.5 ĞB capacity). On the horizon are even larger versions of the double-sided, double-density approach: DVD-14

(double-sided with one dual and one single layer; 13.2 GB capacity) and DVD-18 (double-sided/duallayer; 17.1 GB capacity).

The field becomes even more complex when the most recent entries are taken into account. The DVD-Audio specification was finalized earlier this year with agreements among the dozen-plus patent participants and interested content owners on technical and copyright details. And Sony has announced that its Super Audio CD (SACD), which uses Sony's proprietary 1-bit Direct Stream Digital (DSD) technology, should be in production by the end-ofyear selling season.

Ironically, the rapid prolifera-tion of Internet-based audio distribution-most notably MP3-

has potentially made some of the new audio-disc formats moot before consumers get a chance to vote in the marketplace. (And the rapidity with which members of the electronics, content and delivery domains came to basic format agreements contrasted sharply with DVD's extended and often acrimonious gestation period and underscored how consumer consensus can galvanize consensus in the media industry.)

WAG THE DOG

DVD video formats have already started showing legs in the market-place. The DVD-5 subformat accounts for the vast majority of them, estimated at nearly 78%, according to statistics released by Nimbus International; DVD-10 acthough they actually broker the discs through other manufacturers.)

The most sophisticated of the DVD video formats are still in beta stages, such as the DVD-14 and -18 pilot lines in operation at Warner Advanced Media Operations, and similar lines for Sony's SACD format in Japan. There are no production-level line operations for SACD or for DVD-Audio at the moment, though several record releases, such as Sara K.'s "No Cover" release on Chesky Records, and a number of musicvideo compilations have used DVD video formats to capture the multichannel aspect that promises to be a central selling feature for dedicated DVD Audio discs.

COSTS AND FORMATS

The main issues surrounding DVD manufacturing at this stage center around costs and formats, and most manufacturers are reluctant to discuss either in any depth. Reflecting the general attitude is David Rubenstein, president of Cinram U.S. Holdings, who comments, "DVD is capital-intensive, expensive to get into and expensive to produce. It's profitable now. Will it remain profitable? You hope it will. But we take the counts for another 15%; DVD-9, the most difficult of the three to manufacture, makes up the balance, though various companies report differing levels of success in consistently producing that version.

What this sudden cornucopia of formats has done is turned the pivotal disc-manufacturing sector from a group of technological pioneers into a hypersensitive collection constantly scanning for barometers about the media market. The number of replicators that have entered the DVD market is substantial. They include companies related to patent participants, such as Sony's SDM division and JVC's Disc America; large independent replicators, including Cinram, Nimbus and Americ Disc; and several start-up operations, such as Optical Disc Media, which are basing their revenues on the format. (Inflating that list are several companies representing themselves as DVD suppliers, attitude that we're a media company. If it's on a shiny, round disc, we'lĺ produce it.'

Not all media companies evince a particular urgency to enter the DVD arena. Some are holding back, waiting for two inevitabilities to come to pass: decisions made by the consumer market as to which formats will actually sell in quantity, and for prices of DVD-manufacturing equipment to come down and its operation to become more consistently reliable, as was the case with the CD over time.

That's what Brian Wilson, executive VP of sales and marketing at Allied Digital, says the company is doing regarding DVD-and has done with other technologies, including CD, a realm which the company entered only several years ago. "Our m.o. has always been to lag entry into any new medium, to wait for the technology to mature and the equipment llegal manufacturing of copyrighted audio, led to settlements of more than $20 million in 1998 video and multimedia CDs and newer DVDs costs the music, movie and game industries uncountable millions of dollars a year. Positive steps are now in place to help rectify this significant drain on legitimate sales, with the first results very promising.

"As the result of distributing our 'Anti-Piracy Good Business Practices For CD Mastering And Manufacturing Plants' guidelines last June, we've had numerous tips from CD replicators regarding suspect orders," says Steven D'Onofrio, executive VP and director of anti-piracy for the Recording Industry Assn. of America

"That information prevented close to 1.5 million CDs, with a retail value of $15 million to $20 million, from being manufactured and distributed last year," D'Onofrio adds. Additionally, he notes that evidence collected over three years by the RIAA alone from U.S. CD replicators and their customers, emphasizing the significance of the situation. "This is the largest amount of settlements in any one year in RIAA history since the anti-piracy statutes became law in 1972," he says.

D'Onofrio has very positive views of the new initiative of the International Recording Media Assn. (IRMA) for the industry's first anti-piracy certification/compliance program. "The IRMA program has the potential to be an effective tool for CD plants to proac-tively curtail piracy," he says. "Ken Geil, recently promoted to VP, has been our representative on the IRMA Anti-Piracy Task Force since its inception last fall, and we're very appreciative of that opportunity.'

Frank Creighton, who is succeeding D'Onofrio as director of anti-piracy, will oversee future RIAA involvement with IRMA. "We look forward to Continued on page 58 digital encoding) and their density must be exponentially smaller and tighter. That is compounded by the need, in the case of DVD-10, -9, -14 and -18, to bond two discs together. The CD has a specified thickness of 1.2 millimeters; so does the DVD disc, but, in versions involving bonded discs, each of the two component layers are 0.6 millimeters thick. In real terms, it's the difference between building a Boeing 737 and making a kit model of it.

One illustration of the differences and the practical result is in yield, which is how replicators measure useful output of their manufacturing operations. CD manufacturing is now well above a 95% yield ratio, which means that more than nine out of 10 discs that go in one end of a manufacturing line come out usable. At this stage in DVD's evolution, however, Mueller estimates that DVD-5 and DVD-10 discs are achieving 90% yields; DVD-9 yields are around 80%-"if they're honest about it," says Mueller.

That comment underscores both the technical and the economic components of DVD as a product. Bonding two 0.6-mm discs together is a new discipline in disc manufacturing, and, as such, it requires costly new technology and new techniques. As with any new technology, there is a trial-and-error phase, and that, too, is expensive. Since the concept of the optical disc is already established, replicators entering the DVD arena must become competitive much more quickly. Compared to DVD, ramping up for CDs 15 years ago was a leisurely cruise. Thus, replicators are asserting competency in more sophisticated versions of DVD sometimes before that competency is reached on a measurably consistent basis.

That's understandable, however; Mueller points out that, in WAMO's experience, half the titles it has authored for DVD video in DVD-5, -10 and -9 are using 90% of the available space on those discs, meaning that content developers are already pushing toward the edges of the DVD capacity envelope, using DVD's large capacity not only for more information but also for features such as wider screen aspect ratios and multichannel audio.

"That's after only two years," says Mueller. "That's what's propelling us toward the larger and even more complex forms of DVD so quickly. And competency in formats like DVD-14 and -18 isn't going to be easy." WAMO, which pioneered the DVD-9 production regimen, is itself still in the pilotline stages of DVD-14 and -18

The Commission is pursuing a new and focused interest in CD manufacturing and mastering in the European Union as part of a proposed clampdown on piracy.

If its initiatives shape up as planned, legitimate plants that are tempted by the quick profits of unlicensed overruns will face a much greater risk of getting caught. In addition, the career formats. pirates are going to find the long arm of the law reaching across national borders.

The Commission has formally set out its proposals for tackling piracy for the first time in a discussion document, a Green Paper titled "Combating Counterfeiting And Piracy In The Single Market." By the single market, the Commission means the 15-nation European Union.

Major disc manufacturers, meanwhile, joined together in May to form the International Optical Disc Replicators Assn. (IODRA), based in Geneva, Switzerland. One of the goals of the new organization, under chairman Guy Marriott, will be to ensure that pressing plants for DVDs and CDs are properly licensed to produce those to test opinion on the document. What it found was a unanimity that spanned the music industry, the movie business, computersoftware companies and, indeed, anybody with a commercial interest in optical discs.

At the core of those industries' desires is a ready means of identifying where discs are made and who owns-and is responsible for—the plant that made them.

Finding where discs are pressed is already an established practice in audio CDs through the Source Identification (SID) code. This code, embedded digitally in each disc, carries the pressing source's unique code.

A new development now under discussion by the Commission is Continued on page 60 production, with regular manufacturing slated to begin at mid-year. CD manufacturing has encountered significant pricing pressures in recent years as the CD has evolved into a commodity. That's another legacy that the format will confer upon the DVD format. Replicators are already reporting price pressures on DVD-5 and -10 discs, and the pressure on DVD-9, a far more complex format to manufacture, won't be far behind. That scenario will be compounded now that Philips has announced that it will more rigidly enforce royalty collection on patents critical to DVD, most notably its MPEG datacompression scheme. Other patent holders are expected to follow suit. Thus, it's impossible to discuss the technological aspects of DVD without acknowledging the economic ones, as well.

The CD provides a foundation on both counts for DVD. But all optical-disc formats have to face a future that includes other, non-disc, formats. MP3 has established itself quickly in the nascent virtual-audio marketplace, and other flash-memory products are poised to leap off drawing boards in the near future. But DVD's famil-iarity and its high storage capabilities assure it a strong immediate and near-term future. And, as with the CD, new manufacturing systems and techniques will likely quickly enhance its process efficiencies and economies. As the blessing says, "May you live in interesting times."

continuing our relationship with IRMA once the program is put into place," Creighton says. Geil, responsible for day-to-day RIAA anti-piracy investigations, will continue as the IRMA Task Force representative, now reporting to Creighton.

ALL CONCERNED

Tracing the origins of the IRMA Task Force, executive VP Charles Van Horn notes that an initial meeting last October attracted 30 recording-media industry representatives, including the RIAA and the Motion Picture Assn. of America (MPAA).

"We recognize that replicators were fully aware of the legal implications and potential monetary losses that could come as a result of pressing pirated disks," he emphasizes. "But today's solutions, in the form of RIAA's anti-piracy good business practices, might not fully address the realities of doing business in our fast-moving global marketplace.

"In our advocacy role for the industry, IRMA took the lead in providing a forum for discussion of the 'best practices' related to the problem, so that customers and competitors could legally come together for a constructive exchange of ideas and information. This led to the formation of a 17-member Task Force, chaired by Scott Bartlett of Sony Disc Manufacturing and new IRMA board chairman."

The working group has the mission of drafting an industry compliance program to be certified through implementation of an education and auditing procedure, with details to be outlined at a special open forum at REPLItech North America in San Francisco. Howard Schwartz was hired as IRMA's first anti-piracy director, with sound credentials. The former CBS and Sony Disc Manufacturing executive guided the ISO 9000 certification program for four

"All of our replication members recognize the importance of a recording-media specification for the anti-piracy program that IRMA is tailoring for its members' needs. Sony Disc Manufacturing is a big supporter of both the RIAA and MPAA, as a replicator for Sony Music, Columbia TriStar Home Video and Sony Computer Entertainment [PlayStation] and substantial third-party business. It's impor-tant that we all know who our clients are and, equally important, who our clients' clients are!

Schwartz reported in late April that the specification draft was on track for the REPLItech announcement. The following are key elements of the program:

- · the need for procedures that have industry-specific guidelines for optical-media plants regarding anti-piracy
- · a timetable for the plant to receive the IRMA Certificate of Compliance, estimated at six months the introduction of a central register of all CD and optical-disc plants in the EU. This register would carry details of each facility, including who owns and/or operates it.

When cross-referenced with the SID code, the proposed new register would indicate not only where each disc was pressed but would also give a location for the owners of that plant and who is legally responsible for its proper administration. This, then, would create an unbroken chain of evidence from an unlicensed disc seized, for instance, in a raid in Spain to the home of the owner of a CD plant in Finland.

As a part of the register, the Green Paper proposes, all optical-disc plants would be licensed. As things now stand, to obtain a license, plants would simply have to give basic details—address of facility and of owners and such. It will be for officials and politicians to decide if they want to extend that to include more rigorous testing of legitimacy before granting a license.

The Commission's attitude will be awaited with interest. While the EU has piracy hotspots on its doorstep—Bulgaria in particular—the International Federation of the Phonographic Industry (IFPI) notes that most pirate CDs sold in the European Union are, in fact, manufactured in the European Union. These discs, the IFPI contends, come from otherwise legitimate plants eager to bolster their profit margins or who are simply lax over how many discs are pressed.

PROOF ENOUGH

The Green Paper will also make it easier not just to identify transgressors of copyright law but also to put them before the courts. As the document now stands, it greatly reduces the burden on record companies to prove that they own the copyrights affected by pirated material. In the past, such proof has often been a legal minefield. Important cases have been put under threat because of the legal niceties of demonstrating that any given record company is the rightful owner of any given copyright. Under the Green Paper's provisions, the courts will be allowed to make "reasonable assumptions' over copyright ownership and will not necessarily need to be mired in the small print of sub-licensing

As a final blow against the illicit trade, the Green Paper proposes to raise the penalties for piracy across the EU. However, this is an area that may encounter political resistance.

Representatives of many national governments were present at the Munich meeting, and politicians and civil servants accepted what they heard of the practicalities of the Green Paper without raising objections.

They also remained silent on the issue of raised penalties, but, privately, politicians do not feel warmly disposed to this. The reason is that they regard the practi-cal matters as part of the mechanics of the single market, a concept all EU member states are committed to. But, telling countries what penalties they should apply may seem like interference in their internal, domestic affairs.

It remains to be seen at the end of the Green Paper's progress through the EU's political arena whether this measure will remain in the final draft. How the Green Paper will eventually look when it appears in law will not be revealed until after its presentation to the new European Parliament following lune's elections. However, one thing it is sure to contain is a provision for greater cross-border cooperation among law enforcement agencies.

Audio piracy has generally been a low priority for police forces and customs authorities faced with more traditional problems. The Green Paper intends to raise awareness of the issue and to make sure pirates do not simply vanish over national borders. In its current draft, the Paper provides a greater role for the Commission in ensuring that the international piracy trade provokes a suitably international response.

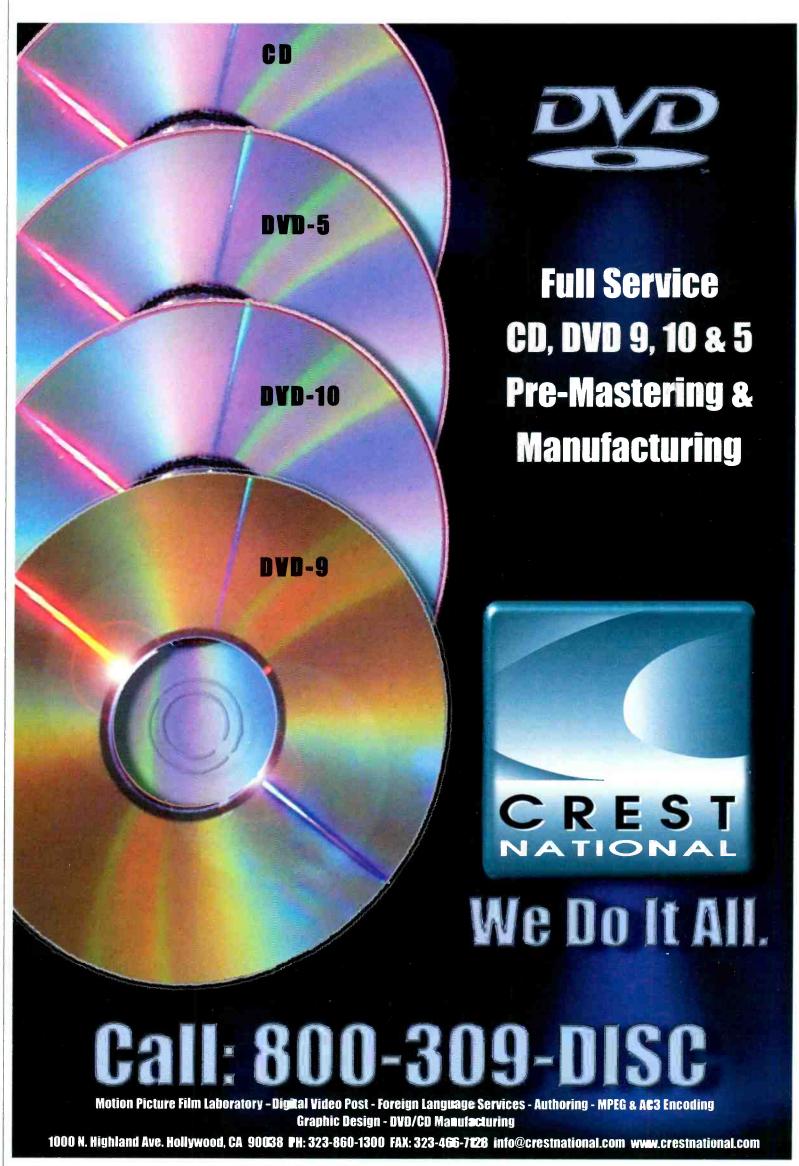

CENTRAL REPONSE

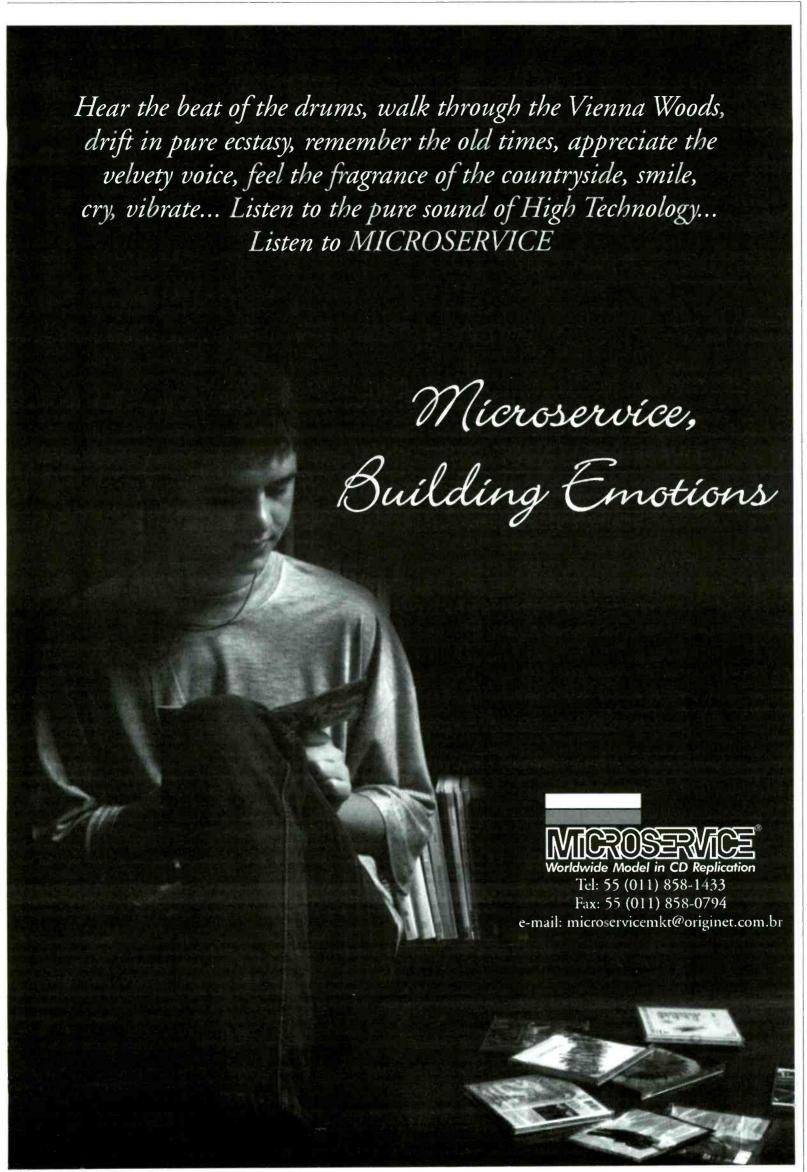

Such an initiative would be warmly welcomed. IFPI director of operations Mike Edwards comments, "Right now, if pirate discs are made in Germany, distributed in Holland and sold in England, what happens? The authorities in each country do a little bit—if we're lucky. What we need is a more central response."

That central response may not be long in coming. Politically, the Green Paper is the first step on the road to a new law. But, before it emerges as a new directive, it has to pass through the EU political machine, then through the 15member state national governments—a process that can take years.

But, the Commission has indicated that it is conscious of the need to act swiftly. It holds many powers and has much scope to act, meaning that any number of the Green Paper's provisions may appear as law at any moment.

to become more reliable, efficient and affordable," he explains. "Then we can use our existing customer base to create the critical mass needed to drive our own entry into that technology." Wilson expects Allied to make "critical decisions regarding DVD within the next three months."

'Many replicators are waiting on the sidelines at the moment, observes Bill Mueller, VP of operations at WAMO. "Just like in CD manufacturing, you started out with huge metallizers working offline in batch processing, which was expensive. Now you have in-line systems that are more efficient and less expensive to buy and run. Based on that experience, there is some understandable hesitancy on the part of replicators to go out and buy equipment that they think will soon become obsolete. And should they buy equipment for only certain formats, like DVD-9, or should they invest in equipment that will make the more complicated formats, like DVD-14? These are the questions they're dealing with, and the answers are going to be determined, to a large extent, by how consumer markets react to these formats."

"Our m.o. has always been to wait for the technology to mature and the equipment to become more reliable, efficient and affordable."

—Brian Wilson Allied Digital

The development of DVD manufacturing will evolve along lines similar to those in other high-tech industries: there are the early adopters, who take the risks inherent in the high costs of early investment in new technologies and reap the rewards of a higher return earlier in the game before markets become crowded with competition, which drives unit prices down (if they choose the right formats); and there are the late arrivals, who benefit from operational refinements and lower costs of later generations of that technology but who come to a table already filled with experienced competitors and a truncated price structure. Because, for all the amazing content that DVD formats afford the entertainment and data-storage industries, it still comes down to how well you can pack bits and bytes onto a piece of shiny, round real estate.

avoiding any unnecessary risk has become an issue of paramount importance for every optical-media plant.

"The thrust of the IRMA antipiracy compliance/certification program will be the industry-wide implementation of an ISO-like protocol, designed to ensure that bogus product does not escape detection, he continues. "Replicators like Allied, who are committed to the Task Force, will be able to sign new business and process new purchase orders with the confidence that every party's best interests are being adequately safeguarded.

Speaking as a small replicator that began pressing vinyl LPs in 1958, Morris Ballen, chairman of DiscMakers, notes, "All duplicators are concerned about piracy, and we've always been very sensitive to the fact that every [music] pirate is looking for a place to score. We're committed to the Task Force and feel very good that we have a really positive compliance and certification program for even a small replicator to implement. We'll be able to structure the program so that our entire staff becomes an anti-piracy staff."

As an important footnote, RIAA's D'Onofrio notes that Florida's recent optical-disc identification legislation was modified to meet the needs of IRMA members after these were explained by Van Horn. "RIAA will be working on similar modifications related to New York legislation, and we anticipate many cooperative efforts related to anti-piracy in the future."

he largest amount of exhibit space, the biggest attendance and an open forum on the world's first anti-piracy certification/compliance program for optical-media manufacturers highlight the eighth REPLItech North America, June 8-10 at the Moscone Center in San Francisco.

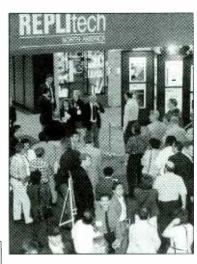

"The show's growth reflects the replication industry's growth," says Sheila Alper, VP, trade shows, for sponsor Knowledge Industry Publications Inc. "The first event, in 1992, had 62 exhibitors using 13,000 square feet of space and drew about 1,200 attendees. This year, more than 255 companies will occupy 10 times that spaceclose to 130,000 square feet-and pre-registration indicates attendance of 7,000, up slightly from last year's 6,800 registrants.

This year's event has more than two dozen new exhibitors, with the growth coming from new companies entering such niche areas as packaging, copy protection, microscopes, CD-R, inspection equipment, data storage and raw materials.

Exhibitors in the new "Innovations In Storage" pavilion are expected to display the newest technologies and development ideas for higher-density rewritable formats and more portable solutions for storage-capacity needs. Included are Eastman Kodak, Hitachi, Toolex International (ODME), Philips Electronics, Multi Media Masters & Machinery and Opti.Me.S. Sponsored by the Optical Storage Technology Assn., the Pavilion will feature such hightech products as DVD-RAM drives, a new blue-laser-based mastering platform for new high-density recordable DVD formats, SSV for flash cards and replication systems for CD-RW and DVD-R.

New this year are free sessions each day, one hour prior to the Exhibit Hall opening. Scheduled are a New Product Preview (8), a fast-paced introductory session featuring new launches in the hall; Industry Status Report (9), current trends and forecasts for the recording media industry, with an update on the international tape and disc markets; and Data Storage Forum (10), a market assessment, including a discussion of the compatibility progress between media and drive manufacturers in relation to both prerecorded and rewritable formats.

The three-day Conference Program held each morning allows ample time for attendees to also take in exhibits. This year's program includes concentration areas of Technical Specifications, Business Strategies and Data Storage. A hard-hitting opening discussion will feature replicators and content holders debating recent market developments.

Alper points to a key survey taken last year at the three REPLItech events in the U.S., Europe and Asia for the continued success. "Over 94% of respondents ranked it as No. 1 in importance as their research source for product information," she reports. "Some 85% would not place an order without seeing the equipment in operation, with REPLItech the best place for that to happen."

Best-Selling Nonfiction Makes Vids

NEW YORK-If theatrical film successes that become video successes, such as "The Lion King" and "Star Wars," are on one end of the sellthrough spectrum, tapes based on nonfiction books are on the other. It's not quite as big, but the books-to-video business has attracted name players like Warner Home Video.

Certainly the interest is there if vendors can overcome the roadblocks that always deter nontheatrical titles. Video can plug into the Zeitgeist that has fueled book sales since the mid-1980s

The last 10 years have seen the enormous growth of the nonfiction blockbuster. Biographies and autobiographies have become an integral part of a celebrity-obsessed culture. Self-help titles have exploded. Shocking true-crime narratives feed a hunger for prurient content. And, in the past year, giant coffee-table histories of the century are rolling off the presses.

Translating readers into watchers has its compensations—and hitches.

Warner, through its distribution rangement with PBS Home Video, has just released its second cassette based on the best sellers of popeconomist Suze Orman. Dan Capone, director of marketing for family entertainment and special interest, says after the book's popularity is established, there are still factors that must be considered.

First, if the author is hosting, he or she has to be recognizable and popular enough to attract the attention of the video-buying consumer. It's also helpful, says Capone, if the author looks good on camera and knows the medium. Orman, who has become a familiar face to television viewers from her appearances on talk show and morning new programs,

Acorn Media's "Quest For A Lost Civilization" is among the book-to-video releases taking advantage of the demand for nonfiction entertainment.

Capone would not comment on precise sales figures for "The 9 Steps To Financial Freedom With Suze Orman," which was released late last vear, and did not yet have results for "Suze Orman: The Courage To Be Rich," released May 4. However, prerelease projections for both are in the "six figures," he says, and Warner is "very happy" with sales of "9 Steps."

Timing is also important. The closer vendors can come to the book's publication, the easier it is to ride the coattails of the print publicity efforts. Capone says it's possible for retailers to enjoy the best of both worlds: Consumer interest generated at the release date and evergreen sales.

"The first Suze Orman streeted right after her new book, so consumer awareness of the book and the video was at its peak," he notes. "But even eight months after the book release you can still be generating steady catalog sales."

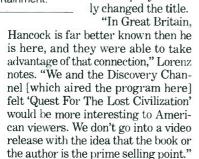

However, coordination can be a sometime thing, ranging from a close working relationship to virtually no ties binding book and video provider. When New Video decided to release "The Greatest Generation," the cassette of NBC news anchor Tom Brokaw's examination of the men who fought in World War II, president Steve Savage says, there was a high degree of cooperation.

New Video, the publisher, and NBC shared key advertising concepts and cover art and were even able to take advantage of different retail channels. The books got into video stores, and the tapes found shelf space in book-

Additionally, Savage says, New Video's experience as a video distributor, which is often the final stop in the creative journey, gave him an advantage. "We're an ancillary medium," he notes. "We've always been able to pick up where other creators left off.

But according to John Lorenz, VP of Acorn Media, coordination is difficult and often of little significance. "There are lots of small issues, everything from different lead times to differences about titles," he says. For instance, when Acorn decided to release a British television production of a Graham Hancock book, "Heaven's Mirror." the company actual-

ABC Video's "The Century: America's Time," based on Peter Jennings' overview of the 20th century, was also up in the air. Sources indicate a lack of coordination, perhaps because the effort was spread over numerous items. "The Century" has taken the form of a book; an audiotape; two TV shows, on ABC and the History Channel; and the History Channel Buena Vista Home Video, which distributes ABC Video, declined to comment.

TV does provide invaluable exposure. According to Lorenz, television swings more weight than best-seller status does. Lorenz notes that viewers are much closer to video audiences than either are to readers.

Savage likens TV to browsing in a bookstore: "You've got to understand that unlike a book that you can open of an unknown quantity. Television exposure gives the consumer a level of comfort. They know what they are getting.

Chicago-based Homevision, a leading publisher of nonfiction video, fills the bill with several TV-savvy titles, including "The Buried Mirror," based on the work by Carlos Fuentes; "The Story Of English"; and "The Prize: The Epic Quest For Oil, Money, And Another advantage to retailers, according to Savage, is that these releases aren't sensitive to street dates. He even anticipates additional demand for "The Greatest Generation," which will benefit from a paperback accompanied by a second wave of marketing.

'Theory' Of Giving. New Line Home Video, Blockbuster Video, and "The Theory Of Flight" star Helena Bonham Carter celebrate the video release of the film, by presenting the ALS Assn. with a generous donation at the chain's West Hollywood location. The Fine Line feature, which portrays a young woman suffering from amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, was released May 25. Shown, from left, are Mike Havlicek, president of the ALS Assn.; Sarah Olson-Graves, senior VP of New Line; Carter; and Jeff Scott, Blockbuster's sales manager, Southwest zone.

Universal Pictures Video U.K. Prepares To Dominate British Sell-Through Scene

This week's column was prepared by guest columnist Sam Andrews, a London correspondent.

UP, UP, AND UPUK: The only way is UPUK. Now that Europe's first attempt at a major is starred and striped under the banner of Universal Pictures International, PolyGram Filmed Entertainment executives in London have re-emerged under a new acronym-UPUK, or Universal Pictures U.K

Newly named chairman David Kosse concedes it's a "mouthful" but says dryly, "It is better than the alternative, Universal Films U.K."

The video arm may be even more of a tongue twister. Universal Pictures Video U.K., or UPVUK, is set to become a major video sellthrough force in Britain. The addition of the Universal catalog is likely to give the company a 20% market share, and that's in spite of giving up its ITC Films slate to Carlton and a large part of the PolyGram catalog back to MGM.

Always bullish, even during the uncertain months just past, key execs such as sales director Colin Lomax pointed to the fact that PolyGram Video enjoyed its best year ever last year with titles such as "Spice World" and revealed plans to exploit the Universal TV catalog in Britain for the first time.

Lomax, who will head up the new UPVUK label when it launches in the fall, says TV product such as "Battlestar Gallactica," "Murder, She Wrote," "Columbo," "The Virginian," "Kojak," "Buck Rogers," "Ironside," "Xena," "Quantum Leap," and "Miami Vice' have huge potential on video and DVD.

The U.K. will be used to test the television titles, and if successful, the product will be rolled out in other territories, Lomax says

In fact, there is a whole new emphasis on catalog product at UPVUK.

Managing director Eddie Cunningham says the new catalog marketing division will refocus the highly successful 4Front catalog division, from the old PolyGram days, across all of UPVUK.

He's concerned, though, that current catalog pricegouging strategies are devaluing the market. "I think we need to be very careful that we don't kill off the market by getting into a downward-spiraling cycle of price cutting and crazy deals," he says.

UPVUK's special-interest video subsidiary VVL is also expanding. Co-managing director Johnny Fewings reveals that the company—best-known for comedy and Irish dance titles-is returning to the feature film market for the first time since 1993. The unit has handled "Elizabeth" and the upcoming "Notting Hill" from production company Working Title, plus Castle Rock product, and is currently shooting "Guest House

VCI/KINGFISHER UNITE: While it would appear that UPVUK is set to dominate the British sellthrough video scene, there are signs of confidence elsewhere in the home-grown sector.

VCI, a U.K. independent that was struggling until it was acquired by retail giant Kingfisher, is beginning to display its a newfound corporate muscle. VCI executives say it plans to raise its market share from 7% to 10% in the U.K. this year.

Although unlikely to match a Hollywood major for years to come, VCI is scoring some noteworthy hits. Its gay TV series "Queer As Folk" is climbing the charts and will probably be its most satisfying hit of Kingfisher itself is also changing the face of its retail operations with the expansion of its Wal-Martstyle Big W stores. It also plans to buy a supermarket chain in Asia.

The moves will make Kingfisher one of the world's largest retail groups, with particular strengths in both software and hardware sales. In fact, its first foray into DVD hardware brought the price of players crashing to all-time lows. Thanks to Kingfisher, it's hard to see anyone in Britain getting away with base players priced at more than 200 pounds ($320).

The company owns consumer electronics stores Comet (U.K.), Darty (France), and Electric City (Singapore).

2 Studios Link For Arnold Flix

'LL BE BACK: Arnold Schwarzenegger is such a huge superstar that it takes two studios to promote his catalog of video hits.

In another joint studio promotion, Artisan Entertainment and 20th Century Fox Home Entertainment will release "The Schwarzenegger Collection," consisting of eight of his films.

Last month Warner Home Video, Columbia TriStar Home Video, and MGM Home Entertainment announced a joint re-promotion featuring the films of the late director Stanley Kubrick (Shelf Talk, Billboard, May 8).

Artisan titles in the Arnold collection are "The Terminator," "Terminator 2: Judgment Day," "Red Heat," and "The Running Man." Fox titles in the collection are "True Lies," "Commando," and "Predator."

The collection is set for VHS and DVD release Aug. 31, at $14.98 each on either format.

A five-title VHS-only gift pack contains "The Terminator," "Terminator 2," "Total Recall," "True Lies," and "Predator." Retail price will be $64.98.

The four-title DVD pack will sell for $94.98 and contains "Total Recall," "Running Man," "Commando," and "Predator."

"Terminator 2" will be the collector's edition that contains nine minutes of addition footage. It was released on both DVD and VHS a year ago.

Each title in the collection will be repackaged with a new look sporting a Schwarzenegger foil banner, and consumers who purchase any two titles can mail in for a $5 rebate.

Artisan president of sales and distribution Jeff Fink says the joint promotion has been a goal since Fox began pick, pack, and ship services for the company a few years ago.

"We've always wanted to do something together," he says, "and this one is going to be big."

Buena Vista To Roll Out Promotions For End-Of-'99 Releases

DISNEWS: Buena Vista Home Entertainment's slate of third- and fourth-quarter releases includes direct-to-video titles from franchise staples "Beauty And The Beast" and "Hercules," as well as rereleases of classics "Alice In Wonderland" and "The Great Mouse Detective" and the live-action "My Favorite Martian."

Two holiday promotions, one aimed at preschoolers, and a vast array of rebates, mail-in bonus items, sweepstakes, and other promotional elements highlight the company's rest-of-the-year plans.

July will see the reissue of "Alice In Wonderland" and "Robin Hood" under Disney's Masterpiece Collection banner. Each is priced at $22.99, and a July 18 newspaper insert will contain a $5 coupon good for instant savings at the cash register when consumers purchase either video.

With the purchase of three videos in the Masterpiece Collection, consumers can receive a free Disney Castle Playhouse. Consumers pay only the $5.99 shipping charges.

Retailers can display the castle when they order a 160-unit pre-pack display.

Billboard.

August will see a quartet of releases featuring some familiar characters. First up are the animated features "Madeline: Lost In Paris," priced at $24.99, and "The Great Mouse Detective," priced at $26.99. Both will be in stores Aug. 3.

When consumers buy "Madeline" along with "Madeline" CD-ROMs from the Learning Company, they can mail in for a free "Madeline" software program.

Those who purchase "Madeline" plus any other eligible video, including "A Bug's Life," "Mulan," and "Kiki's Delivery Service," can send away for a free "Madeline" stationery desk set. Shipping charges are $1.83. The set includes a heart-shaped frame, two pencils, address book, and notepad.

A $3 coupon in "The Great Mouse Detective" is good for instant savings on purchase of "Madeline: Lost In Paris" and "A Bug's Life."

Aug. 17 is the release date for direct-to-video animated features "Hercules: Zero To Hero" and "Beauty And The Beast: Tales Of Friendship," both $19.99. Pre-book date is July 6. Consumers can collect on a $3

by Moira McCormick

mail-in rebate when both titles are purchased. Both feature celebrity voices from their original films, including Tate Donovan and James Woods from "Hercules" and Paige O'Hara, Robby Benson, David Ogden Stiers, and Jerry Orbach from "Beauty And The Beast."

The live-action feature "My Favorite Martian," starring Christopher Lloyd, Jeff Daniels, Elizabeth Hurley, and Daryl Hannah, lands in stores Sept. 28 (pre-book on Aug. 17), priced at $22.99. It comes with a $5 mail-in rebate offer, good for purchase of "Martian" plus either "A Bug's Life," "Mulan," or "Mighty Joe Young."

To support the releases, Disney is launching a multimillion-dollar ad campaign via TV, print, radio, and the Internet. Print advertising includes a Thanksgiving insert in Parade magazine reaching 32 million households. A new "My Favorite Martian" music video will air on the Disney Channel program "Feet Beat."

Like the Terminator himself, Schwarzenegger videos just keep going and going and selling and selling.

DONE DEAL: Intervisual Books, Inc. has completed its acquisition of video marketing and distribution company Fast Forward Marketing.

Based in Santa Monica, Calif., Intervisual will fold Fast Forward into its newly created media and audio division. Steve Ades, formerly president of Fast Forward, has been named president of the new division.

The first video project for the new division will be American Champion Entertainment's (ACE) "Adventures With Kanga Roddy."

Intervisual has an exclusive video distribution deal with ACE and will release three episodes from the Emmy-winning PBS kids' series, available in stores Aug. 24. Catalog titles from the series will follow.

KIDS BREAK OUT: The DVD market appears to be shifting toward the family, following impressive sales performances by "A Bug's Life," "Antz," and "Might Joe Young."

According to VideoScan and DVD Video Group data, sales of family titles represent 25% of the top 100 titles sold this year. The figure marks a 13% increase over 1998.

For the week ending May 16, 18 titles were in the top 50, with "A Bug's Life" and "You've Got Mail" capturing the No. 6 and No. 11 spots, respectively.

November is the launch of Disney's "Home For The Holidays" promotion, which includes "Holiday Toons For Preschoolers," available Nov. 2.

Holiday titles include "Mickey's Once Upon A Christmas," "Winnie The Pooh Seasons Of Giving," and "I'll Be Home For Christmas," each $22.99.

Disney's "Holiday Toons for Preschoolers" includes "Sing Along Songs: Very Merry Christmas Songs," "Walt Disney Christmas," "101 Dalmatians' Christmas," and "Spot's Magic Christmas," also available Nov. 2. Mixed pre-packs in 24-, 48-, and 96-count units are available. Consumers can receive a $3 mail-in rebate when they buy any two of these videos.

Consumers can enter Disney's Home for the Holidays Family Reunion sweepstakes for a chance to carry home the grand prize: a trip for four to anywhere in the continental U.S. Second and third prizes include free family portraits, $250 worth of AT&T calling cards, and giant-sized Winnie-the-Pooh plush toys. Entry forms are available inside the videos or via DisneyVideos.com.

Consumers will also be alerted to the contest via General Mills' Lucky Charms and Cheerios cereals, which will carry promotional information on

MARRIAGES

Monique Ledoux to Eric Lowenhar, April 24 in Dix Hills, N.Y. Bride is a professional flutist. Groom is national sales and marketing manager for Denon Records/Savoy Jazz.

Rockell to John Lee III, May 15 in Egg Harbor, N.J. Bride is a recording artist for Robins Entertainment. Groom is CEO of Dica's Rock Management.

DEATHS

E. William Tucker, 38, in a suspected suicide, May 14 in Chicago. Tucker was an accomplished guitarist, songwriter, producer, and remixer who had worked with Ministry, Foetus, Chris Connelly, Revolting Cocks, Ween, Pigface, My Life With The Thrill Kill Kult, KMFDM, 16 Volt, and many other acts. Growing up in New Jersey, Tucker formed Regressive Aid with future Rollins Band members Andrew Weiss and Sim Cain. He gave guitar lessons in the area, most notably to Mickey Melchiondo, aka Dean Ween, of Ween. He was scheduled to tour with Ministry for its upcoming album, "The Dark Side Of The Spoon."

Rob Gretton, 45, of a heart attack, May 15 in Manchester, England. Gretton was longtime manager of Joy Division and New Order and was key in developing the '80s Manchester scene. After the suicide of Joy Division lead singer Ian Curtis in May 1980, Gretton helped guide surviving members Bernard Sumner, Peter Hook, Stephen Morris, and newcomer Gillian Gilbert into mainstream success as New Order. The group's 1983 disco hit "Blue Monday" is the biggest-selling 12-inch record of all time in the U.K. Gretton is survived by his partner, Lesley, and two children, Benedict and Laura.

Jean Eavis, 60, of cancer, May 16 in England. Eavis was the co-founder of the Glastonbury Festival. The show, first staged in 1970, has grown into one off the leading outdoor events in Britain.

A sweepstakes offering an allexpenses-paid trip to New York for four, via Continental Airlines, and additional prizes will be promoted via a sticker affixed to each video cover.

The centerpiece, though, is Golden Books' "Big Little Golden Books Read In," to be held Sept. 25 in New York. TV personality Deborah Norville will host the event, and New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani will declare Sept. 25 the official Big Little Golden Books Read In Day.

The event will attempt to set a world record for the largest number of children reading on a single day and will be held at the United States Tennis Assn.'s National Tennis Center, which holds 10,000. Golden will give away copies of "The Poky Little Puppy" books to kids attending the event. Other regional events across the country will be held. Those who don't live near one of the regional sites can participate online via GoldenBooks. com.

Alliance Brings U.S. Digital Radio System A Step Forward

Equipment manufacturers Kenwood Corp. and Broadcast Electronics have aligned with digital audio broadcasting (DAB) proponent USA Digital Radio (USADR) in an effort to further the cause of a working digital radio system for U.S. broadcasters.

The joint technology and marketing agreement with Tokyo-based Kenwood will align the companies to develop, test, and promote in-band, on-channel (IBOC) DAB receivers for consumers, including developing coordinated strategies for the market launch of IBOC technology and associated Kenwood products.

Columbia, Md.-based Broadcast Electronics will forge a similar effort with USA Digital Radio for IBOC DAB transmission equipment, along with strategies for the market launch of IBOC and associated Broadcast Electronics products.

These latest alliances accompany previous links with a number of other electronic equipment manufacturers and designers, including Natuel Ltd., Xetron Corp., BittWare Research Systems, and QEI Corp.

USADR filed a Petition for Rulemaking with the Federal Communications Commission last October to implement DAB in the U.S. using the company's burgeoning technology. Owners of USADR include ABC, CBS, AMFM, Clear Channel Communications, Emmis, and Heftel Broadcasting.

Play The Single Or An Album Cut? R&B Radio, Labels Don't Always See Eye To Eye On Issue

This story was prepared by Dana Hall, managing editor of R&B Airplay Monitor.

NEW YORK—For more than 30 years, R&B radio has looked to album cuts to augment the singles that labels push to the front.

But in the days before Broadcast Data Systems-monitored airplay, album cuts rarely made the charts, meaning that many of the format's classics, from Teddy Pendergrass' "When Somebody Loves You Back" to Luther Vandross' "A House Is Not A Home" to Al Green's "For The Good Times," were stealth hits, widely played but never reported.

Now, R&B Power Playlist pages in Billboard sister publication Airplay Monitor show R&B radio across the country playing album cuts by Dru Hill, Lauryn Hill, TLC, Mase, Deborah Cox, Nas, and others.

While PDs contend that labels should be happy to have support for their projects overall, rather than trying to get them to conform to a timetable that means nothing to listeners, labels say that such airplay could ultimately have a negative effect on an entire project, not just one single.

That issue led to a heated panel exchange at the recent Impact SuperSummit convention in Miami between Jive senior VP of R&B promotion Larry Khan and co-moderator/WGCI-FM Chicago operations manager Elroy Smith. In response to radio panelists' contention that label reps should know more about radio programming, Khan suggested that radio should understand how much labels spend on marketing a single and why radio's decision to overlook those plans plays havoc with a label's artist-development strategy.

But Smith repeatedly stated that radio stations were beholden only to listeners. Then there was Def Jam VP of promotion Johnnie Walker, who noted that many of the stations spinning Dru Hill's "Beauty" or "The Love We Had" hadn't even tried to play current single "You Are Everything." How could they know that song wasn't a hit if they hadn't even offered it to listeners? asked Walker.

THE PRICE THEY PAY

As Khan later told Billboard/Monitor, "Labels invest a significant amount of money to launch a single: producing a video, possibly a remix, [purchasing] time buys in trade publications—which can cost upwards of $50,000—and then there is the whole radio thrust with promotions, giveaways, and station visits. It's not uncommon to spend half a million dollars to launch a single, not to mention the $300,000-$400,000 we might spend on a video. We want as many elements [as possible] to hit consumers at one time. It's a waste of time and money when radio plays something else.

'In radio today, we have a lot more people to answer to, and we can't take chances or do favors as in the past'

"Marketing is about timing," continued Khan. "You want all your guns firing at the same time, and that's what you have with a single thrust. What's disturbing is when it's not about a PD choosing between a bad single and a good album cut but simply a PD flexing their muscles to prove they can do whatever they want to do. Often we might have to deal with a PD who simply wants to play A&R director and be able to say, 'I broke this record.'

But radio sees it differently. WJHM (102 Jamz) Orlando, Fla., PD Russ Allen said, "The problem is that there are only a handful of real hits out at any given time. The rest are songs we hope are hits or songs that sound nice. So, at 102 Jamz, we're always scanning the full-lengths and soundtracks, because we have to."

WERQ (92Q) Baltimore operations manager Tom Calococci said, "Some labels will deliberately put out a mediocre first single on a project. It seems to me they are trying to accomplish some other goal, which should not affect my radio station.

"R. Kelly is a good example of this," Calococci continued. "'Home Alone' was a great track for the clubs but didn't work for radio. I believe Jive released it [as a single] to prove that [R. Kelly] isn't just a balladeer. But why should my station suffer because they're trying to change his image?

"In radio today, we have a lot more people to answer to, and we can't take chances or do favors as one might have done in the past," added Calococci. "I understand they have a marketing plan that they have to consider, but just as there are scenarios where it's not in their best interest to support us—as when they cannot give us an artist that we are not playing enough—there are scenarios where we cannot support them in their goals."

Allen said, "Some labels—the ones

Allen said, "Some labels—the ones that get it—are simply happy for the airplay, because ultimately it does expose their artist to the audience and can drive album sales."

Khan responded, "If a station is playing an album cut, that might help the overall sales of a project, but aren't we supposed to determine how we sell our albums? It's like me saying to a PD, 'Your afternoon guy is good, but he should really be in nights.' How dare I tell you how to market your product?"

SINGLE OR ALBUM CUT?

Even so, "sometimes a label makes a blatant mistake in choosing a single. [In those cases] they have no one to blame but themselves," Khan admitted. "But often we find that's not the case. Usually, it's only a small handful of stations that choose to play the album cut and not the single, and I can't see how everyone else can be so wrong."

REACHING THE GOAL

Not every promotion person believes that airplay on multiple cuts damages the single. While numerous tracks from "The Miseducation Of Lauryn Hill" were embraced by radio, Columbia VP of promotion Cynthia Johnson-Harris said that recent airplay for Hill's "Nothing Really Matters" "didn't hurt the single 'Ex-factor' at all. I don't know if we would have had more spins on the single if radio wasn't playing the other cut, but in the end it did not hurt us in reaching our goal to be No. 1."

Johnson-Harris stresses that artists like Hill are the rarity and that when you're dealing with breaking artists, radio will get better results when it supports the single vs. an album cut. "It takes more than just radio to make a song happen," she said. "It takes multiple impressions to get consumers' attention. For a single to be truly successful, you need airplay, video play, in-store promotion, street marketing, and club play simultaneously to bring awareness to the consumer:

"And for radio, supporting the single means you have all those other impressions in the market, to help build familiarity," Johnson-Harris continued. "We've had some PDs choose to play an album cut instead of the single, and it doesn't work, even though it might have been a better song in their mind. There's no visual for people to relate to, no video, no sales to research, and very little national play to compare yours to."

Mark Boyd, Virgin Records VP of promotion for black music, agrees. "It's all about the marketing behind the single. When you put out a commercial single, you have all the artwork in the stores, BET and MTV play, as well as artist support. And you have a national picture to look at."

Boyd added that the goal for labels to achieve unified airplay on a single isn't just about playing the chart game. "Obviously, having success on the charts is part of marketing a single to radio," he said. "The better it does on the charts, the more support we can get from radio overall. But when a small handful of stations is playing another cut, it affects more than just the charts.

"There might be one or two stations that have enough influence in the format overall who choose to play an alternate cut, thus creating doubt with other programmers. That could

CHANCELLOR BACKS OUT OF OUTDOOR ADS. Chancellor Media has sold its outdoor advertising business to Lama Advertising Co. for $1.6 billion in stock and cash. The move comes less than nine months after Chancellor invested $930 million to acquire Whiteco outdoor advertising, putting the radio group among the top five billboard advertisers. The company is now shedding a number of its non-radio properties in an effort to increase its value on Wall Street. The deal comes on the heels of Infinity Broadcasting's $8.3 billion purchase of Outdoor Systems.

WESTWOOD ONE BUYS METRO NETWORKS. Radio network Westwood One has purchased traffic reporting service Metro Networks for $900 million in Westwood stock. The company says the acquisition will increase its local presence and help it expose content in new markets.

SENATORS AIM TO STREAMLINE TELECOM MERGER REVIEWS. During a May 26 Senate hearing, three high-level Republicans aimed to streamline Federal Communications Commission (FCC) procedures. The Telecom Merger Review Act mandates that if either the Department of Justice (DOJ) or the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) has reviewed a proposed merger and found no need to intervene, the FCC must remain uninvolved. If the FCC does get involved, it would have only 60 days to complete the review. Sens. John McCain, R-Ariz., Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and John Ashcroft, R-Mo., complained that the FCC typically re-reviews proposed mergers even after DOJ or FTC approval, adding months to the process and millions of dollars in costs.

CD RADIO SAYS IT HAS REOPENED DISCUSSIONS with General Motors on building cars with CD Radio receivers six weeks after it broke off talks, when it said a deal between GM and competitor XM Satellite Radio was imminent. But an XM representative says that despite this new development, the two companies are still talking. CD Radio holds its annual shareholders' meeting June 22, and a deal with the car company could ease shareholders' fears over a 25% share-price drop in recent weeks.

Still, programmers say all would be better if labels would look to radio when choosing singles in the first place.

"If a large number of stations across the country are on a specific LP cut, that should alert the labels and make them consider that song as the next single," said Allen. "But one of my biggest frustrations is when the label doesn't give radio the cut we want to play, that we are playing, and that's working for us. I'm sure they have their reasons, or maybe it's an artist's decision. But if they come

'It's like me saying to a PD, "Your afternoon guy is good, but he should really be in nights" with the song later on, they'll have to come with a remix."

And even that doesn't assure a renewed life for a song when the label is ready to pursue it. Said Calococci, "As far as supporting a record down the road after we've played it as an album cut, all I have to say is, music burns out. It's the summerrerun syndrome. If you watch 'ER' once, how many times do you want to see the same episode again? Maybe once; after that, you turn the channel. It's the same with music."

Virgin's Boyd noted that labels might not be able to respond to radio's request for a single. "It might be because the song is a duet, and the guest artist's label has not given single rights, or it might have to do with a writer or producer issue. In those cases, if radio continues to play the album cut and we can't release it, we have to move on. We can't wait for radio to be through with it to put out our next single. We have to keep the momentum going or we lose the project altogether."

IT'S IN RADIO'S HANDS

Khan admitted that "ultimately, radio controls our destiny more than we can control theirs. If no one at radio wants to play one of our records, then I have to give up on that project eventually. Whereas if I don't want to give one radio station an R. Kelly record, they have the option of just playing something else or going out and buying it to play. But in cases where we can help radio, as in promotions and so forth, we do try to help. We just want the same support in return."

Calococci speaks for many programmers when he says, "Labels should not expect programmers to compromise their stations just to fit into their larger marketing plan on one single. We should be aware of their goals and even understand why they do what they do, but that doesn't mean we change what we have to do to be successful.

"I try to have good relationships with the labels and support them when I can. But that doesn't include doing anything that is not in the station's best interest as well."

n oleander is a poisonous shrub that entices victims with fragrant white, red, and pink flowers. For Thomas Flowers, the singer of the Sacramento, Calif., rock act named after the plant, it could also be a symbol for his rock'n'roll experience very attractive, but potentially bad for your health.

"Being in a band lends itself to being reckless and childish. In fact, everyone encourages you to act like that," the 31-year-old says. "No one will kick the chick out of your bed, take the straw out of your nose, or tell you, 'You can't fly a plane,' even though you've never taken lessons, as long as you keep delivering hits. I took advantage of '80s decadence and lived like a star even though I wasn't one. That decade is one big blur."

"Why I'm Here," this issue's No. 31, was written at a low point in Flowers' life, when he realized things had to change. "Actually, the whole album is word-for-word applicable to what I was going through then, what I felt, or what people said to me. I had become very vacant. I lacked maturity and made foolish mistakes. All the people who were important to me couldn't stand to be around me. I had come to the crossroads and had to decide whether to be a man or a kid. The songs became advice to myself. They remind me of that was most important [his marriage] still needs work. But I'm looking into phone-in therapy and taking it day by day. And success offers flexibility. I don't dream of rock anymore. I dream about affording a wonderful life and family.'

LET FOREVER BE

Compiled from a national sample of airplay supplied by Broadcast Data Systems' Radio Track service. 110 mainstream rock stations and 68 modern rock stations are electronically monitored 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. Songs ranked by number of detections. Congrainment by number of detections. Tracks showing an increase in detections over the previous movement. A record which has been on the chart for more than 20 weeks will not receive a bullet, even if it registers an increase in detections. Arpower awarded to those records which attain 800 detections (Mainstream Rock) or 1,000 detections (Modern Rock) for the first time. 1 Videocija availability, © 1999, Britonard/BF.

Natalie Merchant Hones Her Song Craft In The Telling

HESE ARE DAYS: With her current album, "Ophelia," a kinder, gentler Natalie Merchant decided to try a different tack to incite change in her listeners.

"I've always been outraged by so many aspects of life and society and wanted to point to things and say, 'Look at this, we need to change this,' "says the former lead singer of 10,000 Maniacs. "But I came to the same conclusion that a lot of people do as they get older: People need to change within first, with their hearts before their minds. Now, instead of wanting to change people, I just want to move them."

Since the release of her second solo album on Elektra in May '98, Merchant has moved more than a million people to buy the project—9,000 alone in just the past month, according to her label—and ignited the airwaves with debut single "Kind And Generous," which hit No. 18 on Hot 100 Airplay and No. 3 on adult top 40 radio, according to Airplay Monitor. That song was basically a hearty "hey, thanks" to her fans and followers for their support during her first solo album, "Tigerlily," released in 1995.

Equally good-natured is her latest single, the moody and poetic "Life Is Sweet," a song about recognizing the good fortune that comes from living life to its fullest.

"Our time here is fleeting; it's ephemeral," Merchant says. "It's good to recognize a deeper appreciation for being here. That's all that song is supposed to do." At adult top 40 radio, it is now No. 15, with strong major-market airplay in New York, Chicago, Boston, and San Francisco.

And all the while, the "earth mother," as one programmer describes her, has remained unaffected, understated, and as organic as a rice cake.

"She's the only quadruple-platinum artist I know who's riding the New York subway," says Greg Thompson, senior VP of promotion at Elektra. "Her appeal is a sense of honesty and positive energy. I think that Natalie truly reaches into the hearts and souls of people. She's a great storyteller, and that's what makes an artist out of people, instead of just a singer who has hit singles."

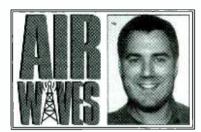

"I think she's all about the lyrics," offers Greg Carpenter, music director of hot AC WMMX (Mix 106.5) Baltimore. "There's good music to back her up, but it really comes down to the message she hopes to get across. I think people identify with what she's saying, and she brings out a lot of passion in them."

"Life is very complicated and daunting, and I want to speak to young Americans and say that I understand but that you must preserve your spirit and protect yourselves," Merchant says. "Life should be more than growing up to acquire things. People have to develop their minds. I especially feel for ostracized teenagers who think there's something wrong with them because they stray from the main-stream—because they feel things."

All of the programmers queried about Merchant agreed that the wisdom-flavored messages she brings to their audiences have made her a core artist for the hot AC and adult top 40 formats. Says Jaime Kartak, music director of WTMX

by Chuck Taylor

Chicago, "We own her. Natalie Merchant totally personifies the sound of this station. When people hear her, they know they're listening to the Mix."

And they do hear Merchant. Besides the two hits from "Ophelia," WTMX has in its active gold library her other solo singles "Carnival," "Wonder," and "Jealousy" and 10,000 Maniacs' "Candy Everybody Wants," "Trouble Me," "These Are Days," and "Wonder." (It recently retired the Maniacs' adult top 40/hot AC staple "Because The Night.")

MERCHANT

"I think she's always been one of our core artists," adds Casey Keating, PD of hot AC KPLZ Seattle. "She really fits in nicely with Sarah McLachlan, Goo Goo Dolls, Jewel, and matchbox 20. In Seattle, she's almost more of a triple-A artist, and she just gives us a little more depth at the station."

Merchant returns the affection, saying that radio airplay has afforded her the opportunity to reach a broader audience that might not otherwise hear her musical soliloquies

"It's important, and it's great to have it," she says. "Radio is a wonderful instrument for reaching the people. It's free, and it's out there. For me, it's even more important than people buying my album. I like to find other ways to reach the audience. That's why I don't think I could put an album out and not tour."

And that's an understatement. In characteristic style, Merchant has toured nearly nonstop since "Ophelia" was released. She wraps up her current run June 8, 9, 11, 12, and 13 with a five-night gig at New York's Neil Simon Theatre.

The performances will provide material for her third solo album, a live set. "We're really excited about that, because her live show is at its pinnacle now. She is in the zone," says Elektra's Thompson. "It's unbelievable how strong she is right now."

Before this round of touring, Merchant spent last summer on the road with the Lilith Fair, performing at 57 of the exhaustive tour's 62 dates. This year, she intends to sit out Lilith.

"I feel like I've really experienced Lilith, and it was great. But I think we'd be repeating ourselves if we did it again," says Merchant. "That show was very validating, with artists like [Lilith founder] Sarah McLachlan and her friends coming up with a good idea and seeing it through in a collective style. It's not an idea that was hatched in a corporate boardroom. It was powerful."

In fact, Merchant saw fit to contribute her live Lilith version of Elvis Presley's "In The Ghetto" on "Lilith Fair Volume 2," released May 18 on Arista. Perhaps it seems a curious choice.

"I like finding popular songs throughout the years that aren't about the most current subjects, to cast light on darker areas," Merchant says. "I felt like Elvis recording such a socially conscious song was such an anomaly—it made it all the more compelling—but because the combination was so bizarre, I'm sure he meant it when he said it."

She adds, "Songs are like languages that die if you don't revive them quickly."

That conscientious focus on such still-relevant subject matter is one of the things that radio agrees sets Merchant apart from the pack at her core stations.

"She's a little different from our other artists," says KPLZ's Keating. "They're more pop in their appeal than Natalie. I think her songs are a little more on the esoteric side, where they come across as less hook-driven than emotionally driven, because of her attention to lyrics."

"Because the tempo is slow on the songs on ["Ophelia"], it takes a little longer for people to embrace her," says Tony Mascaro, music director of WPLJ New York. "Her songs are not as hooky as some of the uptempo stuff, and with those songs people look more for the message, but I think we've gotten into a time now where people are just as much into the lyrics of a song as into the music, particularly with females."

"I just think music is powerful," says Merchant. "It opens people up in ways that nothing else can. When you sing, you tell people who you are. I really appreciate that people are finding things to think about in my songs. I want to be looked at as a good songwriter and as a pretty all right singer."

HIS & THAT: The 1999 MTV Video Music Awards will be held Sept. 9 at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York (Billboard-Bulletin, May 27). The awards show returns to New York after being held last year in Los Angeles, and the event will be the first awards show to be held at the Metropolitan Opera House.

The Music Video Production Assn. (MVPA) is now accepting submissions for its Director's Cuts

'99 event, which will feature underground projects of music video directors. The event will be held July 29 in Los Angeles at a location to be announced. Entries cannot exceed more than 15 minutes each and must be on threequarter-inch or VHS tape. The deadline is June 18. Submissions, which should include an official entry form, should be sent to the MVPA, 1533 N. Commonwealth Ave., Los Angeles, Calif. 90027.

An additional MVPA Director's Cuts '99 event will be held sometime in September in New York For more information, visit the MVPA's Web site at www.mvpa. com.

Matt Farber has resigned from his position as MTV/ VH1 senior VP of programming enterprises and MTV2 GM (BillboardBulletin, May 24). Farber heads to the new Internet broadcasting company I-Cast, where he will be executive VP/GM as of June 14.

YOUNG ACTS SHAKE UP U.K. MUSIC INDUSTRY

faced with is younger and younger artists with quite extraordinary talent."

The trend back toward teenage acts in the pop world arguably began in the U.K., first with acts like Spice Girls, All Saints, and Boyzone that were actively marketed at the supposedly "lost" youth demographic. Now the process has gone one stage further, with teens becoming the creators of the music.

SHALIT

Labels here are continuing to sign young acts, and their average age is getting younger. Epic U.K. is developing the R&B/ pop crossover duo Marvin & Tamara-who are 12 and 13—while London Records is touting the Sugar Babes, a multi-racial female trio whose members are 13 and 14.

EMI/Chrysalis has snapped up 21st Century Girls, while 14-year-old Susan Hedges has caught attention on the indie circuit for her rootsy debut album, "Myron Angel," on the Scottish label Goldrush.

Both the sophistication of the music and strength of their career ambitions are shattering preconceptions about child stars being unwilling puppets of pushy parents or of cynical pop Svengalis.

"I've wanted to be famous since I was 4 years old," says Victoria Hogg, signed to London Records U.K. under the name Victoria. "And to get fame, I will cross every bridge to get to it.

When her second single, "Crazy," comes out here July 19, she will have reached 16 and will turn to a fulltime musical career.

Victoria maintains that she pressured her father into finding her a way to bring her songs to a wider public. "I said to him, What are you going to do about it?"

Her dad eventually secured her a recording session in Sheffield, and she was signed on the strength of the seven songs she recorded.

All the members of the Epic U.K. quartet B*Witched are now well above the age of majority, yet their quest for fame started several years ago before they came of age.

'When we were 16, we worked full time to pay for the recording studio,' savs B*Witched's Keavy Lynch. "Until we got a management deal, we were used to doing all the work.'

Adds member Lindsay Armaou, "We'd done all the groundwork before the management deal. The determination and drive was already there."

ents behind them.'

Co-manager Tommy Jay Smith of International Management agrees. "It's damned hard work, but they were aware of the situation before they got into it."

Sylvia Young, director of the Sylvia Young Theatre School in London, agrees that "nowadays children are pulling their par-

Among those who have attended the school are Billie; Spice Girl Emma Bunton; All Saints' Melanie Blatt, Natalie Appleton, and Nicky Appleton; and Scott Robinson from the RCA U.K. act Five.

Billie, now 16, had done modeling and acting before being signed to Virgin U.K.'s pop label Innocent a year and a half ago by Hugh Goldsmith, its current managing director.

"Sylvia has given her a fantastic grounding and readied her for the entertainment business," says Goldsmith about Billie. "She was able to hit the ground running.'

CRUCIAL BALANCING ACT

Many execs and managers say that keeping the artists within realistic expectations is one of the constant themes in working with minors.

"We have to balance Billie's ambition to work hard and sell records with the need for relaxation and normality and the need to be near family and have your feet on the ground," says Goldsmith.

Billie says that she is "delighted" with her success and that she didn't expect it to happen so quickly. In addition, she says she doesn't think she has to narrow her sights. "I don't feel limited," she says. "There's loads more I want to achieve."

The teen trio Cleopatra was signed to WEA in 1996, but its members had been working with Manchesterbased L.E.T. Management since 1992, when they won a talent competition. The company's Tony Lovell says that mediating between what those around the group want and what the act is capable of is central to managing an act whose members are now 15, 17, and 18.

"Record companies have become aware that Cleopatra are young kids and are not machines," he says. "You have to recognize that that they need their rest periods; they need to eat and drink.

LEGAL LIMITATIONS

Lovell's comments hint at the wealth of practical challenges that come with working with child stars.

The law-most recently updated in the Children (Protection at Work) Regulations of 1998—limits the number of hours that children can work to two hours on school days and Sundays. They may not work at all before age 13, and after that age they can't work before 7 a.m. or after 7 p.m. At age 16, they can leave school and work full time. However, full adulthood in the U.K. comes only at age 18.

The restrictions on under-16 artists don't sit easily with the normally nonstop promotional schedules expected of adult artists—or even the business of recording, where time in studios isn't priced to respect the constraints of the school day.

When an underage artist leaves the country, the person responsible for him or her must seek a license from the magistrate: this makes the guardian legally responsible.

Says Church's manager, Jonathan Shalit of Shalit Entertainment. "What I'm governed by, more than the legal requirements, is education and welfare. You have to go beyond what the law says.

Church normally travels with a singing instructor, a tutor, and her mother, Maria, as a chaperone.

Most young artists credit their families as a source of support and inspiration. While relatives can often provide both, family ties add to the already-complex situation that labels face when dealing with minors.

Says Sony's Burger, "There's a naiveté about these artists because ... there's normally a parent attached to the artist. Typically, neither has much experience of the business, so there's that extra layer with the parent playing the role of chaperone.

But what do parents think of their children venturing into the seemingly murky world of the music business? Brendan Lynch has seen three of his children go into the pop business: first his son Shane, who is in Boyzone, then his daughters Edele and Keavy, who are in B*Witched.

"Your concerns are the usual parental concerns," says Lynch. "The rock'n'roll business doesn't have a particularly good press.'

Lynch says his kids' stardom has left the family "devastated. We don't see each other much anymore."

While the focus and drive may be there for some young stars, as one observer notes, younger artists "have less experience to draw on in terms of knock-backs."

Signing teenage acts can also lay the industry open to the blanket criticism of exploiting children for commercial ends, an argument that constantly surfaces in the press.

With so many potential risks and accusations, one might ask whether such it's worth signing young acts. Sony's Burger says talent, rather than age, is the deciding factor.

for underage talent," he says. "We are out there looking for talent in whatever form it may appear."

Innocent's Goldsmith, while enjoying his work with Billie, says on reflection, "Going forward, if I can avoid having another Cleopatra manager Lovell also says that many people in the record business aren't necessarily prepared to deal with younger acts, not least due to the number of younger, less seasoned executives around. "They have learned, but they are not necessarily better set up," he says. "For example, they did not know that [underage acts] had to have a license to leave the country.'

artist who is under 16, then I would."

A perennial specter hanging over the business is that of young artists from previous eras who claim that they were either robbed financially or deprived of their childhood. No U.K. government body exists specifically to deal with the concerns of underage acts.

James Fisher, general secretary of the International Managers Forum (IMF), says the IMF has seen several inquiries concerning children this year, "whereas we had years go by without anyone thinking about this.

A representative of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children said only that the organization wished to see industry guidelines adhered to. The British Phonographic Industry says it has no formal code concerning minors.

The moral, financial, and physical well-being of musical children, as well as their personal development, comes down to parents, managers, and labels.

On the financial side, most managers say that trusts have been established for their acts. This opens up another potential difficulty. Legally, contracts signed by a minor aren't valid unless they're for the benefit of the minor, but lawyers say that it's almost unheard of for a minor to be released from an agreement on the grounds that it was signed while he or she was a minor.

Since the last upsurge of pop in the late '80s, there has been a sea change in the major-label business, with managers coming into the business from outside of the music field.

There's also some comfort in the fact that many of those accepted by their peers to be "doing it right" are family men and, in the words of one, 'wouldn't ask the artist to do anything you wouldn't want your daughter to do.'

Most of the teen stars of today have a variety of skills and could eventually turn their hand to other areas of the entertainment business, say those looking after them.

Ultimately, though, their future rests with them and how they deal with fame and its aftermath. As Church's manager Shalit says, "We can prepare [Charlotte] to make sure she gets her money and education. As to how she copes with that, it's about

19 Records' 21st Century Girls

21ST CENTURY GIRLS

LONDON-Almost 200 interviews later, the members of 21st Century Girls say they're still enjoying promoting their single "21st Century Girls," which came out May 31 here.

Discovered by Ian Allen of Creative Management, the band has been developed by 19 Records, the imprint started by Simon Fuller at 19 Management, the company that helmed Spice Girls to global stardom.

EMI/Chrysalis has signed the group for the world outside North America, where Atlantic Records has the four girls from Dudley, in England's Midlands region.

The band's music takes up where acts such as Shampoo left off: Noisy teenage rebellion and having fun are recurring themes.

It's still fun, says bassist Fiona Garner, 15. "But sometimes people catch us when we're really tired and worn out."

The band members agree that many people in the business patronize them for being both young and female.

"The other day we were at a practice," says 14-year-old guitarist

Kate Turley, "and I couldn't get the amp to work. And the bloke said, 'Have you plugged it in?"

and that's how we're staying.'

Mobile phones, clothes, and food are among the extravagances that all the girls are enjoying on their marathon stint. Says singer Leanne Garner, 16, "We'll just have had dinner, but we'll order more just because we feel like it."

An album release is being planned for September. DOMINIC PRIDE

The U.K.'s Young Hitmakers

The current generation of young stars is reviving a tradition of teen and preteen acts on the British charts. Here are some of the younger faces, under age 14, who have graced the U.K. top 40 since it began:

1. Little Jimmy Osmond: 9 years, 7 months (November 1972; "Long Haired Lover From Liverpool")

2. Lena Zavaroni: 10 years, 3 months (February 1974; "Ma He's Making Eyes At Me")

3. St. Winifred's School Choir: ages 9-15 (December 1980; "There's No One Quite Like

4. Obernkirchen Children's Choir: ages 9-15 (January 1954; "The Happy Wanderer") 5. Claire & Friends: 10 years

(June 1986; "It's 'Orrible Being In Love [When You're 81/2]")

6. Neil Reid: 11 years, 6 months (January 1972; "Mother Of Mine") 7. Musical Youth: ages 11-16

(September 1982; "Pass The Dutchie")

8. Hanson: ages 12-16 (July 1997; "MMMBop")

9. Jimmy Boyd: 13 years, 5 months (May 1953; "Tell Me A Story")

10. Michael Jackson: 13 years, 6 months (February 1972; "Got To Be There")* *Michael Jackson was 11 years,

6 months old when he first hit as a part of the Jackson 5 in January 1970, with "I Want You Back" in January 1970.

RONDOR MUSIC International, the parent of publisher Almo Music and Irving Music, has sued A&M Records and PolyGram N.V., claiming breach of contract. In the suit, filed June 1 in California Superior Court in Los Angeles, Rondor claims it granted A&M nonexclusive rights to reproduce its compositions under a license agreement signed in January 1990 and amended in May 1993. The action alleges that A&M breached the agreement by underpaying royalties, failing to keep accurate records of the manufacturing and distribution of albums containing Rondor's compositions, and not allowing Rondor access to the label's books and records. The suit, which claims damages in excess of $1 million, seeks an accounting of royalties owed by A&M. A Universal Music spokesman says the company does not comment on pending litigation. BUOYED BY strong sales of domestic product, Toshiba-EMI in Japan saw its overall sales for the year to March 31 rise 7.3% to 76.6 billion yen ($643.5 million). The label, which in the previous year recorded a 15.3% sales decline, ended an 18-month hitless stretch thanks to big-selling local acts such as 16-year-old Hikaru Utada, rocker Ringo Shena, the rock band Kuroyume, the pop trio Dreams Come True, and singer/songwriter Yumi Matsutoya. Sales of domestic repertoire rose 35.3% over the previous year to 41.8 billion yen ($350.9 million), while international product sales fell 10.2% to 23.3 billion ven ($196.2 million). Toshiba-EMI does not release profit figures. Since becoming president in June 1997, Masaaki Saito has emphasized the need to develop new domestic talent and rationalize the label's operations in a recession-plagued economy. In the last two years, Toshiba-EMI has trimmed its staff from 1,230 to some 1,000 through attrition and early retirements. STEVE McCLURE

Gov't Appointee To Oversee Italy's SIAE

BY MARK DEZZANI

MILAN—The Italian government is set to appoint a commissioner to oversee the administration of Italy's authors' rights society SIAE in a bid to speed up reforms at the troubled state-owned corporation. Provision for the appointment of a commissioner with wide-ranging administrative powers is included in the SIAE's statutes when it is faced with

Under the anticipated government decree, which at press time was due for imminent ratification, SIAE president Luciano Villevieille Bideri and his board of governors would be forced to step down and release all administrative powers to the government-appointed commissioner.

Mauro Masi, a state bureaucrat who reports to the government on copyright issues, was expected to be nominated as the commissioner.

This is the second time in six years that the Italian government has placed the stewardship of SIAE under a commissioner, and it takes place against a long-running power struggle between member authors and publishers, as well as between members seeking greater reforms and those who feel that reforms implemented in June 1995 are adequate.

The SIAE was previously placed under the administration of a government-appointed commissioner in 1993, which resulted in the 1995 reforms granting greater representation and voting rights to the SIAE's 50,000 associate members.

Previously, only SIAE's 1,500 fully fledged members were permitted to vote in elections for its president and administrative board. The composition of the board was also changed under the reforms to include four associate members, alongside five full members.

SIAE's latest insolvency problems have been provoked by the failure of its board to agree on a restructuring plan to anticipate a significant loss of revenues when the so-called showbusiness tax on ticket sales and gambling taxes on horse races are abolished at the end of the year to conform with European Union norms.

SIAE's wide network of agents around the country have been responsible for the collection of these taxes. for which the SIAE earns commissions worth 56.81 million euros ($54.63 million) for the tax on showbusiness tickets and 28.4 million euros ($27.31 million) on the betting taxes. Global revenues collected by the SIAE are reported to be some 1.033 billion euros ($933.19 million), of which authors' royalties collected account for approximately 464.8 million euros ($446.93 million).

Tony Verona, managing director of the Ala Bianca independent record label and publishing group and a member of the SIAE's music committee, says that although the loss of revenues had been known for several years, SIAE's executive board has so far failed to make provisions for these losses in its budget for next year.

The present crisis has been provoked by a standoff between the government and the SIAE president Bideri and his board," Verona says. "The SIAE says that as a public corporation it cannot make large-scale staff redundancies and that the government has promised that new activities would be granted to the SIAE to compensate for its revenue losses, but that these have not materialized. The executive board's position is that SIAE's accounts are balanced until the end of this year, but losses previewed for 2000 are due to the government failing to fulfill their promises.

"However, in return the government had been seeking more sweeping reforms to modernize the SIAE, and they felt that these were not making sufficient progress," he adds.

Federico Monti Arduini, managing director of Milan-based independent publisher Café Concerto and president of EMA, Italy's major publishers' association, says that he welcomes the latest developments at the SIAE. He is a member of the organization's foreign technical committee.

"It is what I would call a soft regime that has been imposed on the SIAE by the government," he says. Francesco Chirichigno, will remain in place, as will all of its assemblies and commissions. In that respect, the SIAE will be able to continue functioning. However I do now expect that the main priority of the new commissioner will be to speed up reforms that EMA, along with the other publishers' associations in Italy, has been

The publishing associations EMA, UNEMI, ANEM, and EIA have been proposing that the SIAE be split into two entities. One would be a private entity to manage and divide authors' rights that would be owned by its members, while SIAE's revenue-collection network would remain stateowned and be merged with the government-run ENPALS and INPS tax-collection bodies.

SIAE's Chirichigno was appointed last year with a mandate to restructure the SIAE. He was unavailable for comment at press time.

after Gersh left his post as president of Capitol Records and Silva departed from Gold Mountain Management. After talking to a number of major labels, Wall Street investors, and Los Angeles power broker Michael Ovitz about forming partnerships, they linked with DEN.

"Gas is its own management company, and it's going to continue to be what it is and grow in its own way," says Gersh. "That's something that John and I and the DEN people are going to be involved in in going forward, and we see our connection to retail, promoters, and MTV as a real benefit to everything

And we said, 'Sure.' "

Although Gersh declines to name the act, one strong possibility is Foo Fighters. The group exercised the option in its Capitol contract to leave the label should Gersh depart.

Gersh and Silva pledge that acts signed to DEN Music Group will be equal partners with the label. "We're going to completely reinvent the model by which we sign artists," says Gersh. "At the very least, what we're going to do is be 50-50 partners with all the artists. There are no royalty rates. We're going to pay artists from dollar one gross. We're going to make short-term deals.

"Maybe there will be advances,

Among the acts managed by Gas Entertainment are the Beastie Boys, Foo Fighters, Beck, Rancid, and Sonic Youth.

Gersh and Silva say that DEN does not own Gas Entertainment nor is it an investor in the company. "They're investors in me and John," says Gersh.

DEN Music Group has yet to sign any artists, although Gersh says there are "three or four" they have been wooing over a period of time. Among them, Gersh says, is "a giant artist who's come to us and asked if we'd be interested in putting out a record while they decide what they want to do in the future, because they aren't going to stay with a major label. They asked, 'Would you make a short-term deal where we get our master back?'

maybe there won't, but at the very least, the artist will co-own everything we own," he says. "We're concerned with long-term distribution of their digital rights. That is where we're headed."

DEN will also offer downloads of music from artists appearing on its shows, as other labels allow. And for artists signed to DEN Music, the downloads will most likely be free.

The goal of the DEN Music Group isn't just to sell records, but to build a recognizable name,

"We are here as a team of people to help build DEN," says Gersh. 'We are branding DEN. We want to have hit records, we want there to be a lot of people interested in it, but we're not judging our success by the number an album reaches on the chart. We're going to be judging it by how DEN grows."

RETAIL EXECS SAY STORES WILL SURVIVE, BUT IN A DIFFERENT FORM

dominate the marketplace in five years' time, we will see a greater mixture of offerings as to where the music will be available."

In addition to traditional stores and online merchants selling physical product, the introduction of digital distribution will cause many hybrid forms of retail to come into being, he says.

But whatever the format, Henry Droz, president of Universal Music and Video Distribution, says, "People still want to continue to go into the store and see an array of product, touch it, and turn it over."

Although industry leaders foresee many changes in the next millennium, the main ingredient in their crystal-ball gazing focuses on a store that no longer physically carries deep inventory but instead relies on digital downloads to satisfy the most obscure customer taste.

In that environment, they envision electronic kiosks within stores for the downloading of music, which would free up valuable inventory space that could be devoted to high-margin products that appeal to consumers who like to shop in stores.

Ian Duffell, president of Santa Monica, Calif.-based New Media Network—a new company that says it has designed a new record-store retailing concept for the next millennium—says, "Music retail will be around for many years to come, but it will be a different model. Stores will be far more efficient."

Duffell, who previously headed up the U.S. Megastore operations of Virgin Entertainment, says the days will soon be over for the "inefficient model of stocking vast amounts of inventory with low turnover."

John Marmaduke, president of Amarillo, Texas-based Hastings Entertainment, agrees with Duffell. Marmaduke, whose company builds multimedia stores averaging about 22,000 square feet, says he is not too worried about that possibility. The future "will see more space spent on customers and less space spent on physical merchandise."

INTERACTIVE KIOSKS

Marmaduke says that space may be used for a number of interactive kiosks, which will allow customers, through a touch screen, "to audition, search, profile, customize, and order physically unavailable product and burn it."

Los Angeles-based Virgin Entertainment is going through a "technological ramp-up now," says Anthony Deen, VP of retail design development at the chain. He says the chain is preparing for online music downloads to the store, whereby whole albums can be purchased. Also, the chain will offer custom-CD fulfillment.

He points out that the downloading to the store will allow the majors to sell music that is traditionally not well-represented in retail outlets.

Like other traditional merchants, Virgin recently launched its E-commerce site, and while it currently is shipping physical product to the customer, Deen says he expects to incorporate digital downloading into its online arsenal as well.

will marry their brick-and-mortar offerings with their own Web sites to market them in competition with the pure online merchants.

"Five years from now there will be more of a convergence" between brick-and-mortar and online retail, says Tony Alvarez, president of Torrance, Calif.-based Wherehouse Entertainment. "They won't be two ships passing in the night. Time will make it clear what the consumer appetite for the Net is, and that will make it clear to retailers how much they will have to take part in it."

SHOPPING AS ENTERTAINMENT

Mike Dreese, president of Allston, Mass.-based Newbury Comics, says of the future, "The shopping-asentertainment theme is the only thing that matters. The customer craves a pure pop-culture experience, a 'wow!' experience."

Merchants say they realize they will have to make shopping more of an experience. But whatever the world of tomorrow brings, they say that Internet proponents shouldn't underestimate the cultural value of the brick-and-nortar store.

"There is a value and service that brick-and-mortar [stores] offer to society, which we have to maintain and emphasize so there is a good reason to get in the car and drive" to a traditional store, says Virgin's Deen.

"Ambiance, in my opinion, will be a key success factor," states Pete Jones, president of BMG Distribution and BMG Affiliated Labels. "Stores will need to be not only entertainment software sources but also entertaining experiences. The space reclaimed by adopting virtual inventory should be turned into stages, sofas, viewing environments, and listening booths, much less listening posts. Attracting consumers will depend much more on their enjoying the store in the fullest sense of the words."

At Newbury, Dreese says, the plan is to operate stores that "offer a lot of other types of merchandise than CDs." The chain already does this—selling large quantities of Doc Martens shoes, for instance—but it will add even more nontraditional items. "We think the model is a 7,000-to 10,000-square-foot store with music [in] about 75% of the space."

NEW PRODUCT LINES

The big chains know that diversifying product lines is crucial, too.

"Look at Musicland," says Marcia Appel, senior VP of corporate advertising and communications for that Minnetonka, Minn.-based chain. "Music is about 50% of sales. It was 90% 10 years ago. There's already a lot of product diversification. I think it will continue."

David Lang, president of South Plainfield, N.J.-based Compact Disc World, echoes that belief. His stores, for instance, have been selling candy

MILLENNIUM SERIES

With this issue, Billboard kicks off a new series, "Beyond 2000: 21st Century Business," which will examine the music and home entertainment industries on the eve of the millennium. Focusing this week on 21st-century retail, forthcoming installments will look at topics including the labels of the future, home video's prospects, and the artists' contract process in the age of the Internet.

Billboard also inaugurates this week an occasional millennium feature, "Future Focus" (see page 6), offering capsule commentaries on the entertainment business as it heads toward 2000.

limited. Online retailers may offer tens of thousands of albums to listen to, but each generally has only four or five tracks than can be sampled, and each sample is limited to 30 seconds, in accordance with the majors'

MASS MERCHANTS AND MALLS

One trend Compact Disc World's Lang sees continuing is "the dominance of the mass merchants and the electronic stores" in selling music. "Music's not the No. 1 reason you visit these stores. They're pricedriven. My main competition is not so much music retailers but Wal-Mart, Target, Best Buy, and Circuit City."

Although the mass merchant and

Although the mass merchant and the electronics store may survive as important sellers of music, other retail models may suffer, some say.

Jim Caparro, chairman of the Island Def Jam Group, says "effective retailers will be in step" with the coming changes. "Those that do not will find the next phase of Darwinian evolution affecting them."

Newbury's Dreese believes that music "superstores as we know them—very deep catalog—are dead. Alternative delivery mechanisms will cannibalize at least half of what they're doing." He sees fewer than a dozen large superstores continuing in top markets "as legacy warehouses for customers who prefer buying by traditional methodology."

New Media Network's Duffell agrees, saying there is "a good argument that says big stores will be dead in the water because they will have a lot of excess space. Now is the time to get into other business for that space."

Meanwhile, Dreese says, "I think the neighborhood or community strip center is gone as well. The old model—the 3,000- to 4,000-squarefoot Strawberries—is gone. Competition will not allow stocking the top 500 titles."

However, Hastings' Marmaduke sees the re-emergence of smaller neighborhood stores: "Enhanced inventory management will allow music merchants to customize stores for smaller marketplaces and neighborhoods." He also predicts there will be more genre-based stores.

Dreese is not bullish about mall music stores either but recognizes their importance in the overall mall environment. Music pricing offered by retailers like Best Buy, Wal-Mart, and the Internet merchants "will cause the enclosed-mall people to suffer." But, he adds, music stores are "desperately needed by malls," which face a possible overall decline in retail sales in coming years because of E-commerce and thus need merchants that can provide some entertainment value.

George Sutton, analyst with Dain Rauscher Wessels, believes mall retailers are likely to thrive even with a boom in online sales.

"The reality is that major mall-based retail sales are impulse-driven," he says. He points out that teenagers, who still make up a large percentage of music-buying consumers, purchase much of their music in malls—"they go there to hang out"—and pay cash for their purchases. Online purchasing requires credit cards, to which many teens do not have access.

Moreover, the big retail chains like Trans World and Musicland have Web sites either up and running or about to launch and can take advantage of their marketing muscle, their distribution systems, and their relationships with record companies to build viable online businesses to compete with the Amazon.coms.

If competition intensifies and certain retail models fall out of favor with consumers, retail consolidation is likely to continue, although opinion is mixed on the matter.

"We've had so many consolidations recently—Spec's, Strawberries, Blockbuster, Camelot—I think we're now beyond that," says Universal's Droz. "The health of retail is much better than it was five or six years ago."

But Litwak, whose company, Trans World, has been behind much of the consolidation in recent years, believes it will continue "over the next few years." However, he doesn't think that is the death knell for the independent store. "We'll always see a need for the mom-and-pop. To what degree I can't tell you."

PRICING MODELS

As for CD pricing, one record company executive, who commented on condition of anonymity, says, "I think pricing will increase. There are pressures that have to be addressed. There's no question we'll see new levels above $17.98 pricing."

Of course, no one can predict what the pricing models of the future will be, with digital downloading just in its infancy. And a whole new configuration, DVD Audio, is on the horizon.

Hastings' Marmaduke says he foresees DVD Audio eventually supplanting the CD. New Media Network's Duffell says that the CD has peaked, but he doesn't see it being replaced by one format. "There will be a major diversification of formats," says Duffell. "You will be able to get music on flash memory, Mini-Disc, MP3, or CD."

But before that happens, DVD Audio presents "a terrific challenge" to retail, says Lang. "It offers a tremendous advantage to bricksand-mortar [outlets]. It's much more difficult to download DVD Audio than CDs. It behooves retailers to encourage DVD Audio."

At any rate, the new media do not seem to frighten most brick-and-mortar retailers.

Musicland's Appel says, "[Technology] is going to be a big advantage for the industry. Retailers will embrace technology and use it as a means for communicating with customers, giving them options on how they get product. It'll add real energy to retail."

for a few years. "Wherever there's a lifestyle statement to be made, we look at those items. Music sales are declining as a percentage of sales. We're looking for more add-ons. We're competing with Wal-Mart and Target selling hundreds of thousands of things other than music."

One merchant points out that one of the advantages brick-and-mortar merchants have over online retailers is that in many stores, customers can listen to entire albums, although the sampling selection is generally abolished, there could be a rush to discount prices, followed fairly quickly by stabilization of prices, based on the experience of other markets where a fixed-price system has been scrapped.

• Australia is still grappling with the fallout of the decision to allow parallel imports. Non-music discount businesses entered the market in the decision's wake, cashing in on the availability of cheaper CDs from Asia, while department stores expanded their music range. Independent stores have lost share, while such major chains as Sanity and HMV continue to expand.

Most retailers are confident that these hurdles—big and small, long-and short-term—can be cleared and that the music merchants' core business, the sale of physical product at brick-and-mortar stores, will continue at a healthy pace well into the first decade of the 21st century.

"Forecasters... say that online may account for 5% to 15% of retail in the next five to 10 years," says Brian McLaughlin, managing director of HMV Europe and chairman of trade body the British Assn. of Record Dealers. "So where is the other 85% of that business going to be done? I presume it will be done through the record stores."

ONLINE AS A BOON?

McLaughlin is among those who see the emergence of online retailing as a positive development for music merchants, although he has major concerns about how the record industry is handling the medium and about the pace of development.

"It's all anyone wants to talk about

"It's all anyone wants to talk about at the moment," he says. "The biggest concern is that nobody quite knows where it's going to end up—and that's a message coming across from some of the senior players in the record industry."

Uwe Imhof is CEO of aktiv Musik Marketing (aMM), an umbrella company consisting of more than 220 independent German music merchants. Members of aMM can take advantage of centralized buying. Imhof agrees that the Internet and its use for the trade is the dominant topic among retailers.

The way forward, he suggests, will be for retailers to take their unique knowledge with them online: "We shall make use of the expertise we have to offer on the Internet as well," Imhof says.

According to HMV Japan president Paul Dezelsky, "In the early '90s, we all enjoyed strong market growth. In '96-'97, the market 'plateaued' and didn't start growing again until last year, when we enjoyed small growth."

LESSONS LEARNED

As a result, he says, "a lot of retailers have become inward-thinking—looking at their format and how they change and adapt to new circumstances. Some have done that well; others, not so well."

McLaughlin agrees that the retail sector's proven ability to meet challenges will not fail it, even as the nature of those challenges changes.

"We've overcome the recession, which was a major challenge—I don't think anyone had seen minus like-for-like sales growth such as we saw during that time," he says. "But we responded to that, and we understand that the customer is different now—and that in itself has been a major challenge."

According to Dezelsky, retailers need to "add value, make stores more entertaining, give people a reason to get off their butts and get on the subway and go to the store. We're not pessimistic about that, because we think there is still going to be a big market for people who want to go to stores to buy music and find out about trends in a more social setting."

Dezelsky says merchants should not ignore their existing strengths when seeking to give consumers added reasons to visit stores.

"There are," he says, "two ways record stores can improve in this aspect. One is by using technology in better and different ways, and the other is good old-fashioned customer service. That's something that stores can offer, and computers can't."

IN-STORE ENVIRONMENT KEY

"The record shop is now more of a destination store, more of a magnet for fun and excitement," McLaughlin says. "It's not just a question of shoving records in a browser and hoping people will just fall in the door: We've got to work very hard to provide a more entertaining and vibrant atmosphere. That may involve technology being part of that, with online facilities available to people in the store."

"Online retail is a current buzzword," says Charles Caldas, CEO of key Australian independent label Shock Records. "But shopping is still a social activity, and malls continue to expand in Australia. Retail's largest challenge is to create places which are exciting, social, community meeting places."

Daniel Agostinelli, CEO of Sanity in Australia, believes that the store of the future will offer a wider array of products. "Our stores will be lifestyle-driven," he says. "We'll be stocking everything from sunglasses to mobile phones"

Sanity launches its online retail operation in August, but Agostinelli doubts it will account for more than 5% of its business.

Jeff Harrison, chairman of trade body the Australian Music Retail Assn. and owner of independent retail outlet Gaslight Records, says, "If record stores end up as no more than CD vending machines, why not diversify to include chewing gum or travel packages to music festivals abroad?"

HMV Japan marketing director David Terrill sees increasing competition from other goods and services, such as video games, for young people's disposable income.

However, Terrill is among those who does not see branching out into other product lines as the key to prosperity for music retailers.

"Absolutely not," he declares. "Specialist retailing needs to be specialized. The minute we start to go into other areas, our customers will no longer regard us as specialist music retailers."

TERRILL

'The minute we start to go into other areas, our customers will no longer regard us as specialist music retailers'

Dezelsky predicts a coming concentration among retailers, with fewer but bigger players. The three formats of stores best-placed to survive in the longer term, he suggests, are as follows:

- big stores with a wide range of
- specialist genre stores;
- and stores in a convenient location that cater to local requirements.

And while technology earns most of the headlines, the greatest problem ahead, according to Dezelsky, could actually come from "the demographic trends [with the proportion of teens/youth in decline] in the next five years, which are going to create a challenge for all of us. We're dealing to some extent with a different target market. But kids are always going to be our core target market. What we have to do is not alienate other groups and persuade them to spend money on music."

LABEL AS COMPETITOR

Despite optimism about the strengths traditional dealers can bring to the online environment, and their ability to continue to compete as brick-and-mortar players, an area of serious concern—and uncertainty—is the imminent arrival of record companies as online retailers and the possible built-in advantage their position as copyright owners could give them.

"One of the things that concerns me most is where the record companies sit," McLaughlin says. "I don't think that the record companies anywhere in the world have handled this particularly well. We recognize that behind the scenes they're working to try and get themselves a share of the Internet business. That is totally transparent now, even though most of them actually deny it... As far as I'm concerned, good luck to them.

"Most of the traditional retailers—HMV, Tower, Virgin—and some of the new players, such as Amazon and CDnow, are going to be much better than anything the record companies can put together," McLaughlin adds. "They don't have experience in dealing with this business. They've never had any experience in dealing with the customer.

"What would concern me is—as the copyright owners, what are they going to do with this newfound retail arm? Am I going to be treated fairly? Is there going to be a level playing field when this product is released? Is it going to be released to me the same day as it's released to their own retail customers?"

McLaughlin also emphasizes the nature of E-commerce development as a moving target, particularly with the emergence of digital TV and expanding cable networks.

"This thing is not necessarily going to end up online," he says. "A number of us—not just record retailers but other retailers in Britain—believe Ecommerce is going to end up through the TV."

WHO'S ONLINE?

As with other major markets, there's increasing online activity in Japan. Tower Records Japan has an online mail-order service; HMV Japan is planning to set up such a service this fall, while CDnow Japan is already up and running.

Tower Records Far East managing director Keith Cahoon points out, however, that one major obstacle to online commerce in Japapn is the country's relatively low credit-card-usage rate compared with the U.S., for example. Per capita, says Cahoon, such usage is about 20% of that in the U.S.

At leading Japanese independent label group Avex, chairman Tom Yoda describes the current and immediate future situation as "a transition period for the Japanese record distribution system. There are lots of newcomers jumping onto the [retail] bandwagon. It's going to be very competitive."

BMG Japan president Hidehiko Tashiro says Japanese labels have to make more of an effort to communicate directly with retailers and consumers.

In the U.K., HMV will have its new Web site fully up and running in September, and most major music retailers are already well-advanced with online plans aiming to counter the threat from E-commerce.

Tower Records' new European Web site is currently launching; when fully operational, it will offer English-, French-, Spanish-, Italian-, and German-language versions, with access to a 600,000-title database. WHSmith is due to unveil its new Web site shortly, while Virgin Megastores is to launch its U.K. online operation in July.

Specialist online retailer Boxman launched its U.K. operation in March. Although traditional retailers are losing some chart sales to supermarkets, and online retailers are increasingly targeting catalog sales, Boxman CEO Tony Salter insists the future for brick-and-mortar is assured—for now.

"There's still a big bit in the middle," he says. "I don't think online retailing is as much of a threat to the traditional retailers in the short term as they think it is. It's not that cannibalistic. In half a generation, perhaps, when the entire population's buying habits have changed, then it'll be very different."

STILL A ROLE

Udo Lauen, commercial director of Warner Music Germany, is totally convinced that, despite the everincreasing amount of online trading, specialist trade record shops will continue to play an important role.

"As long as an artist's development cannot be ensured solely via advertising or the Internet, the physical sale of records will need this distribution channel," he says.

Lauen acknowledges that the eventual impact of online business on retailers' profits will depend on several key factors, notably the attractiveness of the programs on the Net and whether consumers are prepared to compromise on packaging—doing without finished cover, jewel box, and original CD.

Germany's largest music retail specialist, Wom, is currently in the middle of preparations for an Internet site. However, it is "a straight Internet site, with no E-commerce facilities," according to managing director Wolfgang Orthmayr. He adds that he does not think downloadable music on the Net poses a real risk to retailers' record business or that it will gain any real market share in the next few years.

"After the first wave of 'infomania' has subsided, the customer will continue to buy his records at record stores," Orthmayr insists.

WB SIGNS FOUR NEW R&B DEALS

urban music division, Alison Ball-Gabriel.

In discussing the commitment behind the revamped black music division, Warner Bros. Records chairman/CEO Russ Thyret says, "We've aggressively sought out deals with some of the most respected producing talent in this key area. Together with Alison Ball-Gabriel, senior VP of urban music promotion and marketing Dwight Bibbs, and VP of media relations and artist development Karen Lee, these moves underscore our continuing commitment to this obviously vital music area."

Quartararo says Warner Bros.' strategic goal was to find the "right way" to re-enter the marketplace with the "most diverse roster serving the urban consumer while being respectful of the black music community. Any good team is as good as the music; I reached out for people who are lightning rods for talent. Ironically, the original template for this was the '60s and '70s WB regime under Mo Ostin, who brought in great producers like Quincy Jones and Tommy LiPuma.

"WB hasn't really been contributing to the urban music community as much as I think it can," continues Quartararo. "I've tried to assemble a team of people who complement one another with their different skills. They all share my passion for R&B music and a vision for this company to further develop their contributions to urban music."

Says Ball-Gabriel, "You can't build a label by yourself. Every major company has production deals with different hit producers and artists. We're building the WB black music division on that same premise.

"We're not trying to sign too many acts," Ball-Gabriel continues. "We're going to concentrate on releasing one album every two to three months, so we can focus on and break artists."

The four announced production deals, and their affiliated imprints, encompass R&B, hip-hop, rap, and pop. They are as follows:

• Rock the Bells (RTB): LL Cool J's imprint takes its name from one of his earlier hits. The RTB roster includes R&B male quartet AMyth, whose first single, "1, 2, 3" (from its "The World Is Ours" album), is schedule to come out this summer; rapper Smokeman, who also appears on AMyth's first single; and a yetunnamed pair of female singers.

LL Cool J continues both his solo recording and acting careers. He's set to begin recording an album for Def Jam this month and will also appear in three feature films this year, including Warner Bros.' upcoming "Deep Blue Sea," on whose soundtrack he'll also be featured.

Describing RTB as talent-driven rather than producer-driven, LL Cool J says, "I'm not purposely going to be trying to do any genre. We'll deal with the genres we know how to deal with, doing what we feel from the heart. This is an opportunity for me to go somewhere and be a part of something new, a building process. For a long time, there was a void at WB in terms of this kind of music."

• GhettoWorks (GW): This imprint

• GhettoWorks (GW): This imprint is a division of Flavor Unit Entertainment, which is co-owned by Compere and Queen Latifah. While the Flavor Unit record label still exists, the company's management arm has been downsized, with Compere now managing only Latifah, LL Cool J, and OutKast.

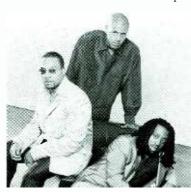

"GhettoWorks is something Latifah and I wanted to do to give artists an opportunity to put out whatever it is they feel like doing," says Compere. "It's not so much our music but the artists' visions."

GW acts include rapper Rowdy Rahz, male vocal group Merge, female vocal group F.A.T.E., and songwriter/rock artist Janice Robinson (signed to WB under a separate deal). Compere says GhettoWorks' first project will likely be a compilation album featuring the "GW artists, a new Latifah song, and some of the other artists we're developing through our different ventures." He adds that Latifah is currently signed to Flavor Unit and will still record on her own. Her talk show will debut in the fall through Flavor Unit Television.

Compere, with Latifah and Naughty By Nature's KayGee, is also working on an album by 17-year-old male vocalist Jaheim, who's under the Flavor Unit/Illtown banner (Illtown is part of KayGee's company).

• Somethin' for the People

SOMETHIN' FOR THE PEOPLE

(SFTP): This imprint carries the name of the Warner Bros. act made up of members Sauce, Fuzzy, and Cat Daddy. Currently in the studio finishing its own Warner Bros. album (due this summer), the threesome is responsible for producing Eric Benét's "Georgy Porgy" single and Will Smith's "Just The Two Of Us."

Cat Daddy says the SFTP imprint will focus on R&B and hip-hop. "We have some decisions to make in the very near future [regarding artists]," he says. "But by the year 2000 we'll have something out there." Among the acts SFTP has in the making is a female spinoff of Somethin' For The People called Somethin' Sexy.

• Rain Records: Atlanta-based songwriter/producer Manuel Seal Jr. calls his new imprint "a wonderful deal that will focus on R&B, hip-hop, and pop music." His background includes working with industry colleague Jermaine Dupri, as well as Whitney Houston, Deborah Cox, TLC, and Usher.

Seal wrote two songs ("Alone," "I Don't Need You") that appear on Dexter's upcoming Warner Bros. debut album (July 13). Rain Records' acts include vocalist Lakeisha Wright and male quartet Touch.

In a separate move last October to boost its own hip-hip/rap roster, sister Warner Bros. label Reprise appointed Kris Parker VP of A&R. Parker, better known as Jive artist KRS-One, says the label plans to release the first project under that deal in late August: "The Temple Of Hip-Hop." The 12-song album features Parker, Grandmaster Flash, Chuck D, and Koll Herc, among others. Additional Parker signings for Reprise include Kool Moe Dee and rappers Thorel and I Born. Shootyz Groove, signed to Reprise at the time of Parker's appointment, is expected to release an album in October.

Blues Music Assn. Launches In Memphis

BY CHRIS MORRIS

MEMPHIS—The Blues Music Assn. (BMA), the recently founded, Memphis-based blues industry trade group, was publicly launched with a meeting at the Center for Southern Folklore May 28 on Beale Street here.

A second BMA function was scheduled at the Chicago Cultural Center on June 4, during the Chicago Blues Festival.

The Memphis gathering, held the day after the 1999 W.C. Handy Blues Awards (see story page 8), was attended by approximately 140 spectators. It marked the first public presentation of the BMA's goals and programs since the nonprofit organization was founded at an October meeting in Olive Branch, Miss. (Declarations of Independents, Billboard, Nov. 20, 1998).

Founding members who spoke during the Memphis function included BMA president Bruce Iglauer, who operates Chicagobased Alligator Records; Blues Foundation executive director Howard Stovall; Sony/Legacy VP of A&R Steve Berkowitz; Brad Paul, VP of promotion at Rounder Records; Michael Frank, owner of Chicago-based Earwig Records; Blues Revue editor/publisher Bob Vorel; Sam Veal, director of the Springing the Blues Festival in Jacksonville, Fla.; Michael Cloeren, director of the Pocono (N.Y.) Blues Festival; and artists Gaye Adegbalola of Saffire—the Uppity Blues Women and Bobby Rush.

Iglauer views the relationship between the BMA and its sister organization the Blues Foundation as analogous to that between the Country Music Assn. and the Country Music Foundation.

"The BMA is a trade association of individuals and companies whose primary business is the marketing of the blues to the public," Iglauer says. "The primary function of the Blues Foundation is charitable and educational... It is not motivated by business concerns, and the BMA is."

The BMA's mission, as stated in its literature, is "to achieve greater economic success for the blues by expanding the marketplace for blues music."

Membership is open to labels, agents, managers, songwriters and publishers, festival promoters, professional radio programmers, clubs and talent buyers, blues publications, instrument manufacturers, duplicators, retailers, publicists, journalists and authors, and musicians. Annual dues range from $100 for musicians and songwriters to $3,000 for companies or individuals with gross income above $25 million.

"In order to raise the money we need to operate and grow, we'll have to look to labels and organizations that can pay more than the minimum of $100 a year," Iglauer says.

The BMA's immediate goals include conducting a demographic study of the blues market; founding an awareness and marketing campaign for blues music; developing a strategy for use of the Internet as a promotional tool; and creating a national retail promotional campaign in conjunction with the Handy Awards, the annual honors presented by the Blues Foundation.

A modest Handy Awards retail promotion was established prior to the May 27 ceremony this year at Pop Tunes, Manifest Discs & Tapes, and Wherehouse Records/Blockbuster Music outlets in the South and Southeast.

"I'm confident that next year there will be a number of Handy Awards [retail] opportunities available exclusively to BMA members," Iglauer says.

(Snapper Music).

Acoustic blues album of the year: Rory Block, "Confessions Of A Blues Singer" (Rounder Records).

Reissue album of the year (presented to the label): Ruf Records, for "Hand Me Down My Moonshine," Luther Allison.

The evening marked the return of hometown hero Rufus Thomas to the Handys ceremony. Thomas, who hosted the first Blues Awards show in 1980, stepped in as a last-minute substitute for an ailing Ruth Brown and co-hosted with blues guitarist Joe Louis Walker.

The show featured stirring live performances by Walker and guitarist Scotty Moore, Kenny Wayne Shepherd and the Double Trouble rhythm section, Bernard Allison and Deborah Coleman, Shemekia Copeland, Johnnie Bassett, Marcia Ball and Tracy Nelson, Roomful Of Blues, and Piazza & the Mighty Flyers

This year, owing to a conflicting booking at the Orpheum, the Handys ceremony moved from early May, when it coincided with the Beale Street Music Festival, to the Thursday preceding Memorial Day weekend. A new, stand-alone W.C. Handy Blues Awards Festival was mounted in 14 Beale Street music venues and drew thousands to the historic district on May 28-29.

Burrito Brothers. I don't think that's going away anytime soon. Those records found a peculiar place. They influenced a ton of people. I think that's gonna stick around."

"Return Of The Grievous Angel" was co-executive-produced by Almo Sounds GM Paul Kremen and Emmylou Harris, who first rose to prominence as Parsons' vocal partner on his solo works "GP" (1973) and "Grievous Angel" (1974).

Harris—the 1999 recipient of Billboard's Century Award, the magazine's highest creative honor-duets on three tracks on the tribute album: with Sheryl Crow on "Juanita," with Beck on "Sin City," and with the Pretenders on "She."

Other participants include the Cowboy Junkies; Evan Dando and Juliana Hatfield; the Mavericks; Steve Earle and Chris Hillman (who co-founded the Burrito Brothers with Parsons); Elvis Costello; Lucinda

Williams and David Crosby; Whiskeytown; Wilco; and the Rolling Creekdrippers (an ad hoc group featuring Jim Lauderdale, Victoria Williams, ex-Jayhawks member Mark Olson, and Buddy and Julie

Some of the proceeds from "Return Of The Grievous Angel" will benefit the Vietnam Veterans of America Foundation's campaign for a land-mine-free world. The campaign provides leadership to get mines out of the ground; to provide artificial limbs, wheelchairs, and rehabilitation to mine victims; and to increase public education about the global land mine crisis.

Kremen says he was inspired to put "Return Of The Grievous Angel" together after seeing Harris perform at the Fillmore in San Francisco several years ago; during a break in the show, Wilco's then-new debut album was played in the club.

He recalls, "I thought, 'It's amazing, because she just played a bunch of Gram's songs in the first set, and he was such a massive influence-so clearly delineated in this new Wilco record. Wouldn't [a tribute] be a great idea?'

Kremen says that after he joined

'We wanted to pick artists who have sort of carved their own niche'

- EMMYLOU HARRIS -

Almo Sounds-whose founders, Jerry Moss and Herb Alpert, had released Parsons' albums with the Burrito Brothers—he "realized that half of Gram's publishing catalog lived at the Rondor publishing affiliate that Jerry and Herb owned . . . It just made so much sense for Almo to do this project that I slowly started approaching Emmylou.

'I didn't want to do it without Emmylou," he adds. "I knew [Harris] would bring a certain weight to the project, and that would, in turn, bring the weight of some higher-caliber artists."

Harris says that when Kremen approached her, he "tried every way in the world not to use the word 'tribute,' because he knew that I felt that there's just this plethora of tributes going on. And at some point you say, There's probably too many of them.' But I liked Paul. I liked his energy, and I thought in the case of Gram, it wasn't so much a tribute as an introduction to [him], because a lot of people don't know who he is. They've heard his name; they haven't really heard his music."

In assembling the project, Harris says, "we wanted to pick artists who have sort of carved their own niche, who, like Gram, sort of went their own way. That's one of the things we're trying to get across-he sort of colored outside the lines, so to speak."

Some of the artists were longtime Parsons fans: Costello, who performs "Sleepless Nights" on the album, first recorded a Parsons song in 1981, while Dando and Hatfield had played "$1,000 Wedding" in their club act long before they cut it for "Return Of The Grievous Angel."

Harris herself had not volunteered to perform on the album. "I was invited," she says. "I just thought, 'I'm not gonna do a track. If anybody wants me to sing on it, fine. If they don't, that's fine.' I was just directing traffic and issuing invitations.'

However, the Pretenders' Chrissie Hvnde and Beck both asked Harris to duet on their numbers. Crow's plan to record with Jakob Dylan never bore fruit, but she came up with an alternate plan when she sat down with Harris in New York.

Harris recalls, "I said, 'Do you still want to do this thing for Gram?' She said, 'Yes, let's do it tomorrow. Let's you and I sing something, and let's do it tomorrow'...So I went in the next day. We just cut it live, and that's the second pass.'

Cowboy Junkies' ethereal version of "Ooh Las Vegas," an uptempo number in its original rendition by Parsons and Harris, will be serviced to radio in late May.

Kremen says, "We're going to take it to modern rock, to hot AC, to triple-A... If we can get a handful of modern rock stations on this, we can turn on a totally different audience. Same thing with a hot AC format.'

Of the label's other plans, Kremen says, "We have a huge press campaign going. We're working all the late-night network shows. We're hoping to put a 'Sessions At West 54th' together on this. 'World Cafe' is doing a syndicated radio program on it. In addition, we'll be doing oodles of NPR stuff.

"We're doing a lot of consumer advertising," he adds. "We're doing a lot of Internet promotions. Obviously, we'll be doing a lot of retail advertising and positioning at the real music-intensive accounts—the Virgins, the HMVs, Towers—and we'll really be focusing on the [Coalition of Independent Music Stores], where we're getting tremendous support. We'll be doing addedvalue programs with them.'

A live event is a possibility. "We may be putting a concert together later in the summer," Kremen says. "Probably in September, where we'll try to get as many of these folks together as possible."

Dave Crouch, GM of the Rhino Records retail store in L.A., envisions strong sales for the tribute among alt.country listeners.

"The No Depression movement would not have existed except for Gram Parsons, who is the godfather of white soul for country/rock, Crouch says. "Just how hot a lot of those artists [on the album] are, and the fact that they're tipping their hats to Gram, is going to open people up to Gram's music. The fact that Emmylou is such a class act will help it, too.'

N THE ONE: Jennifer Lopez sashays to the top of The Billboard Hot 100 this issue with "If You Had My Love," earning the Epic Records Group imprint Work its first No. 1 single. "Love" shows strong growth at both radio and retail, as it moves 38-24 on Hot 100 Airplay with an increase of 5.6 million audience impressions and holds at No. 1 on Hot 100 Singles Sales for a second week.

A 30% increase in unit sales secures Lopez the Greatest Gainer/Sales designation for the second consecutive week. "Love" is the first song to earn back-to-back Greatest Gainer/Sales honors since Feb. 13 and Feb. 20 of this year, when Whitney Houston Featuring Faith Evans & Kelly Price turned the trick with "Heartbreak Hotel" (Arista). "Love" is the initial single from Lopez's debut album, "On The 6," which hit stores June 1, $oldsymbol{S}$ ALES SURGE: Three songs break into the top 30 of the Hot 100, boosted by first-week sales activity.

Whitney Houston jumps up 11 spots to No. 21 with "It's Not Right But It's Okay" (Arista), as 14,000 units of the CD and vinyl maxi-singles released were scanned.

Case makes the biggest move on the chart, as "Happily Ever After" (Def Jam/Mercury) climbs 43 notches to No. 26. "Happily" is the highestdebuting song on the sales chart this issue, at No. 9. It moved 29,500 units.

R. Kelly closes out the triumvirate by halving his way up the chart, 54-27, with "Did You Ever Think" (Jive). "Think" scans 18,000 units and debuts at No. 17 on Hot 100 Singles Sales.

KE-KICK FOR RICK: It was a year ago this week that teams from 32 nations were in France preparing to compete for the right to hoist the World Cup trophy over their heads. Due to the massive success of Ricky Martin's No. 1 single "Livin' La Vida Loca" (C2) and his self-titled No. 1 album, the official song from the 1998 World Cup, "The Cup Of Life" (Columbia), re-enters the Hot 100 at No. 95, as radio and retail are breathing new life into the track. "Cup" is receiving 64% of its 14 million audience impressions from the three New York-area top 40 outlets. It ranks No. 2 at WKTU, No. 12 at WHTZ, and No. 16 at WBLI Long Island.

On the retail side, "Life" drops off the Hot 100 sales chart this issue after re-entering April 3. In its original 13 weeks on the sales chart, from June to September 1998, "Cup" scanned 100,000 units. In the 10-week span of its second run, Martin added 55,000 pieces to his total.

LEO IN THE LEAD: Hot Shot Debut honors go to Blessid Union Of Souls at No. 75 with their name-dropping "Hey Leonardo (She Likes Me For Me)" (Push/V2), which narrowly bests Madonna's "Beautiful Stranger" (Maverick/Warner Bros.) for the honor. "Stranger" is from the highly anticipated Mike Myers flick "Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me," which opens Friday (11). Although I am not pitting the songs as a battle between the appeal of Mr. DiCaprio and Mr. Powers, a Claymation "Celebrity Deathmatch" battle between the two would hold a certain appeal.

VH1'S SUMMER SPOTLIGHT CAST ON DONNA SUMMER

"It feels good to have a label to call home," says Summer, who has recorded for Oasis, Casablanca, Geffen, Atlantic, and Mercury. "More importantly, it feels like the label I should've had all along."

VH1 Presents Donna Summer: Live & More—Encore!" features live performances of classic Summer recordings, including "MacArthur Park," "Hot Stuff," "Bad Girls," and "No More Tears (Enough Is Enough)," all of which reached No. 1 $\,$ on The Billboard Hot 100.

The live portion of "Encore!" also includes "My Life," a new song Summer wrote with Pete Waterman, Paul Berry, and Gary Miller. The track is taken from the singer's forthcoming Broadway musical, "Ordinary Girl."

Additionally, the album spotlights two new studio tracks: "Love Is The Healer," penned by the singer and Nathan DiGesare and produced by DiGesare, with additional production by the team of Chris Cox and Barry Harris (aka the remix outfit Thunderpuss 2000); and the set's first single, "I Will Go With You (Con Te Partiro).'

For "I Will Go With You," which was produced by Hex Hector and Mac Quayle, Summer reinterpreted Time To Say Goodbye," an operatic ballad originally recorded in Italian by Andrea Bocelli and Sarah Brightman and included on Bocelli's "Romanza" album.

"I told Bruce [Sudano, Summer's husband] that I wanted to do the consummate dance recording of the century," explains the singer, who is an ardent Bocelli fan, and whose songs are published by Sweet Summer Night Music (ASCAP). "While we were talking, Andrea's version of the song was playing in the background. All of a sudden, Bruce said, 'Turn it off-that's the song.' So, since no official English lyrics exist, I decided to reinterpret it.'

According to Chesnut and Ceraolo, Epic will be working hand in hand with VH1 on this project. "The network is giving us a lot of promotional time, as well as multiple airings of the concert and 'Behind The Music' episode," Ceraolo says.

VH1 VP of music talent Bruce Gillmer confirms this, adding, "By the week of June 7, we'll have a significant promo campaign going. In addition to spots promoting the two premieres, we'll offer direct sales of both the CD and home video.

'We'll also pull a performance from the concert to run as a videoclip. Of course, we'll be playing the video for 'I Will Go With You,' too."

On June 24 and July 2, she will appear on "The Rosie O'Donnell Show" and "Today," respectively.

In addition to Summer's TV expo sure, Ceraolo says, clubs will play a major role in the setup and execution of the project. DJs were serviced with a promotional 12-inch of the remixes of "I Will Go With You" on May 21.

Scheduled for commercial release July 6, "I Will Go With You" went to radio June 1, according to Ceraolo, who envisions the single making inroads initially at dance-leaning rhythm-crossover and AC stations. and then spreading to mainstream top 40/pop formats.

Rhythmic top 40 WKTU New York began playing the buoyant track May 13. "We've been getting great phone response," says Frankie Blue, the station's PD. "Donna's been a core artist for the station since day one, so people are really excited to hear something fresh and new from her."

Retailers agree. "Donna always does great for us," says Tim Devin, GM of Tower Records' Lincoln Square location in New York. "I'm looking forward to this album. I see it immediately popping into the store's top 25.'

Adding to the project's visibility will be the inclusion of "MacArthur Park" on "Pride 2K," a label CD sampler to be given away at gay-pride events nationwide in June.

And on June 18, Summer-who is managed by Stan Moress of Nashville-based Moress-Nanas Entertainment and booked by Rob Heller of the Los Angeles-based William Morris Agency-embarks on a fivemonth tour.

				His attaction for not chipment of 1 million units (Platinum) A PIAA contification for not shipment Albums with the greatest sales gains this week. ● Recording Industry Assn. Of America (RIAA) certification for net shipment of 500,000 album units (Gold). ▲ RIAA certification for net shipment of 10 million units (Diamond). Numeral following Platinum or Diamond symbol indicates album's multi-platinum level. For boxed sets, and double albums with a running time of 100 minutes or more, the RIAA multiplies shipments by the number of discs and/or tapes *Asterisk indicates LP is available. Most tape prices, and CD prices for BMG and WEA labels, are suggested lists. Tape prices marked EQ, and all other CD prices, are equivalent prices, which are projected from wholesale prices. Greatest Gainer shows chart's largest unit increase. Pacesetter indicates biggest percentage growth. Heatseeker Impact shows albums removed from Heatseekers this week. Is indicates past or present Heatseeker title. © 1999, Billboard/BPI Communications, and SoundScan, Inc.

Zep Soars In May RIAA Certs

BY CHRIS MORRIS

LOS ANGELES-Led Zeppelin mined a mother lode of diamonds and precious ore in May certifications from the Recording Industry Assn. of America (RIAA).

"Led Zeppelin IV" (Swan Song, 1971) climbed to certified sales of 21 million. The set is now fourth on the list of all-time best sellers, behind Michael Jackson's "Thriller" (Epic, 1982, 25 million), the Eagles' "Their Greatest Hits 1971-1975" (Asylum, 1976, 25 million), and Pink Floyd's "The Wall" (Columbia, 1979, 23 million).

The English band's "Physical Graffiti" (Swan Song, 1975) hit diamond status, reaching certified sales of 15 million; it was last certified at 9 million in 1997. (The 15 million figure represents sales of 7.5 million for the two-album set, since the RIAA computes sales in multiples of discs.) "Led Zeppelin" (Atlantic, 1969) was certified at 8 million, while "Led Zeppelin III" (Atlantic, 1971) was certified at 6 million.

Among 1999 bestsellers, Britney Spears' "... Baby One More Time" (Jive) topped the quadruple-platinum level, while TLC's "Fanmail" (LaFace/Arista) went triple-platinum.

Bone Thugs-N-Harmony's Krayzie Bone (Relativity) and pop vocal quintet Five (Arista) scored their first platinum albums in May.

Barbra Streisand brought home her 40th gold album with the 1976 Columbia set "Classical Barbra." She becomes only the second performer to be honored with 40 or more gold award plagues; Elvis Presley leads the field with 62. The Beatles trail Streisand with 39 gold album discs.

Krayzie Bone, Latino star Jose Luis Rodriguez (Sony Latin), and rock unit Sevendust (TVT) debuted in the gold album category.

Finally, Latin sensation Ricky Martin began his conquest of the English-speaking market with his first gold single, "Livin' La Vida Loca" (C2/Columbia).

NOTHING TO SNEEZE AT: So, after their record-setting, million-plus bow, how big was Backstreet Boys' second week? Still pretty darn big, as the sum, in excess of 621,500 units, ranks as 1999's third-largest sales week, behind only the first-week sum and the total rung two weeks ago by Ricky Martin (661,000 units). The Boys' second-week sum happens to be larger than the first-week sum by such notable '90s albums as Wu-Tang Clan's 1997 outing "Wu-Tang Forever" (609,000 units) and Metallica's self-titled 1991 album (598,000 units).

Stack up all the sales weeks that we've compiled since The Billboard 200 picked up SoundScan in May 1991, and the current chart-topping sum is the 29th largest of that span. The total marks a 45% decline from last issue's 1.13 million, while runner-up Martin only has a 13% slide from his prior-week sales, still hanging tough at 399,500 units.

VAY FLOWERS: Throughout the '90s, May has not been a particularly fruitful month for the music industry. Thanks in large part to the eye-opening totals pulled in by Backstreet Boys and Ricky Martin, May 1999 is one that stores' buyers will remember fondly.

For each of May 1999's four complete weeks, industrywide album sales (including catalog titles), have stood tall, averaging in the neighborhood of 12.7 million units. It's instructive to note that the week that led up to Mother's Day, when Tim McGraw led the pack with 252,000 units, was the biggest of the month, with 13.2 million units, even exceeding the totals hit during the first weeks that albums by Martin (11.9 million) and the Boys (12.9 million) hit stores.

Each of this issue's top seven titles exceeds 100,000 units, compared with only three during the same of '98, when the "City Of Angels" soundtrack was No. 1 with 165,000 units. Last year, May's average weekly sales stood at 11.7 million pieces, a number that has risen each year since 1994, when May's weeks averaged at 9.5 million units.

WINGING FROM TREES: Although SoundScan reports showed the "Tarzan" soundtrack with a 31,000-unit gain, the Greatest Gainer goes to the soundtrack to "Notting Hill," which had a gain of 16,500. We've made that adjustment because about 19,000 of those copies were actually sold during the prior week by some of the Disney Store locations but were missing from last issue's chart due to a snafu in computer-to-computer communications.

The adjustment means the album might face a challenge holding its ground on next issue's chart, but the Phil Collins vehicle will certainly climb to the higher limbs when the film hits screens June 18.

PEPPER: Teen sensation Britney Spears is the queen of the week's TV pack, as appearances on "Late Show With David Letterman" and "The Rosie O'Donnell Show" help her cement her hold on the No. 3 spot with a 12,000-unit jump, the biggest gain by any title in last issue's top 10. Kid Rock, who checks into the top 10 for the first time in his career (13-9, an 18.6% gain), has an increase of 14.500 units Mary Chapin Carpenter also played an O'Donnell/ Letterman double-header, but her bow at No. 43 (32,000 units) is her lowest start on the big chart since 1992, the latest illustration of the pressures felt in the current Nashville climate. Her '94 album debuted at No. 10, and her last one bowed at No. 20 in '96 . . . Watching Jimmy Buffett's hits package is one way to spot the change of seasons. When he tours each summer, "Songs You Know By Heart" returns to the top 10 of Top Pop Catalog Albums. However, it appears a stop on the "Today" show helped the title to a 28% gain, marking only the second time it has been No. 1 in the 407 weeks it has spent on the catalog list . . . A label executive friend once paraphrased an old Bill Clinton campaign slogan, saying, "It's the music, stupid." I'm pleasantly reminded of that phrase from time to time, as I was when I discovered Pachyderm's Indigenous during the recent Assn. for Independent Music Convention. This brothers-and-sister quartet of American Indians has carved out a territory that lies somewhere between Cream and Stevie Ray Vaughan, with even enough chops to tread the sacred ground of Jimi Hendrix's "Voodoo Chile." Its "Things We Do" is bubbling under the Heatseekers chart, but even more impressive, this indie act's lead track, "Now That You're Gone," was able to scale as high as No. 22 on Billboard's Mainstream Rock Tracks and No. 9 on Heritage Rock Tracks in sister magazine Rock Airplay Monitor without the resources of a major label. Perhaps Indigenous' early inroads shows that music can still matter in the age of big-business radio Seems like I'm always losing my favorite copy editor, that behindthe-scenes breed who make guys like me seem smarter than we are by scrubbing away grammar glitches and misspellings before our words reach your eyes and helping us insert that occasional post-dead-line insight. The latest to abandon me is Elizabeth "Beth" Renaud, who has checked out after five years on our masthead. I wish this avid and recorded a year later by Bad Boys Blue as "Out Of The Blue." Mariann Grammofon studio manager Lars "Dille" Diedricson, composer of the song with lyricist Gert Lengstrand, denies through his record company ever hearing Brandes' song.

The contest is broadcast live to all members of the European Broadcasting Union and is relayed the next day to Australia and Canada.

The triumph of "Take Me To Your Heaven" helps continue the celebration of the 25th anniversary of Sweden's first Eurovision win with Abba's "Waterloo" in 1974. This is Sweden's fourth victory.

The top three songs in the 1999contest all took advantage of relaxation of the rules on languages. After Abba won by singing "Waterloo" in English in 1974, the rules were changed so artists had to sing in an official language of the country, a rule that allowed only the U.K., Ireland, and Malta to sing in English until this year.

This year marked Iceland's 13th time in the contest, and second-place Selma was the first Icelandic artist to sing in English. Her slice of pure pop, "All Out Of Luck," is the most successful Icelandic entry in the history of the competition. Third-place Germany achieved its showing with a song performed in German, Turkish, and English. The six-person group Surpriz also appealed to Israelis with the song "Reise Nach Jerusalem" ("Journey To Jerusalem"). Rounding out the top 10 were Croatia, Israel, Estonia, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Denmark, the Netherlands, and Austria.

In the wake of her Eurovision win, Nilsson hardly had time to celebrate. Less than five hours after reprising the song onstage at the International Congress and Convention Center in Jerusalem, the artist was on a plane to Jordan to perform in a televised song competition. The 24-yearold performer has been a fashion model and an actress, but she says, "I'm first a singer. Modeling is fun to do. I did 34 episodes of a soap opera, but that's not a big thing." Nilsson entered the contest as a solo artist but has been performing with the Swedish band Wizex. She intends to continue performing with them. "I want to do both. If there's no time, I'll have to choose.'

The Swedish song isn't the only post-Eurovision release. BMG has first option on the German entry, released on Jupiter Records. So far, there are release dates for Israel, Turkey, and the Benelux countries. Although it placed 15th out of 23 entries, the Maltese song has several deals in place, according to Robert Cefai, secretary of Malta's Song for Europe Committee. "Believe 'N Peace" by youthful femme trio Times Three has been picked up by the IMP label for Israel; the ZYX label for Germany, Switzerland, and Austria; and EMI for Belgium, the Netherlands, Luxembourg, and France.

Next year's Eurovision Song Contest will take place in Stockholm, according to officials from Swedish television

ident] told me to find a producer anyway and gave me the freedom to make the record I wanted to make, whether it was country or not."

Richey decided on British producer Hugh Padgham (XTC, the Police, Sting) for her third album, "Glimmer," which comes out Aug. 3. The release will be worked out of Mercury Nashville, though it was recorded in New York and London and is not targeted to country music consumers.

Richey also found herself a new manager, Frank Callari (Lucinda Williams) last fall. "Kim has an extremely experienced manager in place this time, and the plan is for all of us to get together to pool our knowledge in breaking her," says Mercury Records Nashville senior VP of sales, marketing, and promotion John Grady. "She's not the first challenging artist for either Mercury or Frank but a world-class songwriter who deserves to be heard."

Terry Currier, owner of two Music Millennium stores in the Richey stronghold of Portland, Ore., sums up the difficulty in marketing an artist like Richey: "The problem is she's caught in the middle of everything. She's not straight-ahead country or straight-ahead anything else. But this record's really, really great, and she's such a wonderful person. We've had her for three in-stores, and one time a local TV station followed her over here in its skycopter and broadcast it live."

Currier says that Richey may well be in a stronger market position now, having survived the PolyGram/Universal merger changes and releasing a new album while bigger-name roster artists hold back and wait.

Richey's self-titled first album was released in 1995. The follow-up, "Bitter Sweet," was released in 1997. But Richey's initial success came as a songwriter providing country hits for the likes of Radney Foster ("Nobody Wins") and Trisha Yearwood ("Believe Me Baby [I Lied]").

one wants something uptempo positive, which doesn't appeal to me that much," says Richey. "The songs from [my] first album tried to strike a balance between that and the kind of stuff I'm more happy with. I wrote the second album more for me but staying within the country or alternative-country zone, which broadened it up a little bit. But I wrote a lot of this record not only for me but without thinking where it would fit. And I didn't care if it fit anywhere."

In this climate, most major retailers with online sites have so far shied away from offering any kind of downloadable material. For example, the Musicland Group, which is in the process of revamping its Web site, won't include a download feature.

"It's going to be part of our future, online and in stores," says a company spokeswoman, "but there are a lot of issues to be worked out, and it won't be part of our E-commerce site at the start."

Legal, free downloads of tracks from well-known artists—such as tracks from Sarah McLachlan and Public Enemy secured by Amazon—continue to be prevalent on the Internet for promotional opportunities on a limited-time basis.

Other major retailers with online sites, including Virgin Megastore and Wherehouse, also don't offer digital downloads for sale.

FUTURE PREP

In spite of the fact that purchasing downloads isn't yet a popular option, those online retailers who are participating say they offer the feature to prepare for the future.

"There's no reason not to have it," says National Record Mart marketing manager Angie Walker. "Companies are contacting us with the content, and much of the music available for downloads is rare tracks that aren't available in stores." Like Tower, National Record Mart offers downloadable singles for 99 cents.

Tower's Farrace agrees. "It's exciting technology, and we don't want to get blindsided."

CDuctive's Ryan admits that the download market doesn't appeal to everyone . . . yet.

"As more reputable material becomes available," he says, "people will pay for it." firmed her new songwriting attitude. "There are great people here, but I was getting bored by everything in Nashville and wanted to go outside," says the Bluewater Music Corp. (BMI) writer, who wrote or co-wrote all 14 "Glimmer" tracks.

"I wanted to work with Hugh because I was a big XTC fan. Even at my country gigs we'd cover 'Love On A Farm Boy's Wages.' And I also thought [the Police's] 'Synchronicity' was a brilliant record."

Richey and Padgham assembled a band made up of "Bitter Sweet" drummer Sean Pelton, Sting guitarist Dominick Miller, guitarist Waddy Wachtel, bassist Zev Katz, and keyboardist Doug Petty. "I don't think people will hear the record and go 'Who's that?' if they heard me before, but it's a different production," says Richey.

The lyrics reflect stressful personal and business situations, Richey notes, declining to detail further "so that others can get things from them to relate in their own lives."

Richey received a lift during the writing process when she was invited to attend Miles Copeland's songwriting camp in France, where she co-wrote "Can't Lose Them All" with attendees Paul Thorn and Maia Sharp and "I Will Be The Strength In You" with Dave Bassett and Sam Brown. (She later co-wrote "Good At Secrets" with new pal Sharp.)

'Writing songs for other people is restricting'

- KIM RICHEY -

"I met all these great people I'd never have come across otherwise," says Richey, who also collaborated stateside with Randy Scruggs, Tim Krekel, ex-Green On Red member Chuck Prophet, the Gathering Field's Bill Deasy, and frequent writing partner Tom Littlefield.

First single "Come Around" will be featured in the soundtrack to Kevin Costner's upcoming baseball movie, "For The Love Of The Game." The single ships Tuesday (8) to triple-A, hot AC, and top 40 stations.

"We're going back to all the markets that we conquered for Kim Richey on her previous albums," says Grady, citing Seattle; Boston; Denver; Charlotte, N.C.; Portland, Ore.; Philadelphia; Washington, D.C.; and Detroit.

At modern AC/top 40 station KALC Denver, PD Jim Lawson is anxious for "anything" from Richey. "I've asked Mercury to hurry and get me a copy of the album, because ["Bitter Sweet's"] 'I Know' was a huge record for us and is a staple recurrent," he says.

"Glimmer" will be "extremely press-driven," says Grady, "because everybody in the press loves Kim, and face it, that's what drove Lucinda Williams' project last year." While the album is a Nashville release, its publicity will be handled by the label's PR staffs in Nashville and New York.

Under Mercury Nashville's auspices, the Monterey Peninsulabooked Richey is set to play as many radio-sponsored concert events as possible.

"We challenged her to go out and choose her musical direction and producer, and she's made a masterpiece," says Grady. "The third time's a charm, as far as we're concerned, and now it's up to us to look at ourselves in the mirror and say we got it in front of people."

Media Act, which was introduced by Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., and Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., and was included in the Senate's giant juvenile-justice bill. The bill was passed by the Senate May 20 and is now awaiting action in the House (Billboard, June 5).

Also included in the Senate bill is a provision introduced by Sen. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif., calling for an investigation of the gun companies' marketing practices. Following news of Clinton's order of an entertainment industry probe, Sen. Boxer released copies of a letter that she wrote to the president saying that singling out the entertainment industry was unfair.

"For some reason," she wrote, "you directed your study only toward the entertainment industry and did not include the gun industry. This omission is disturbing to me and all those who do not want to scapegoat one industry but want a comprehensive analysis of the causes of youth violence."

VICTOIRES' FUTURE IN DOUBT

scheduled for mid-February 2000. According to Victoires GM Enrico Della Rosa, the withdrawal of SNEP "could pose problems for the organization of the event." SNEP GM Hervé Rony concedes, "There has always been tension with SNAM, but this was the spark that ignited a crisis."

MAJORITY VOTE

According to Rony, the SNEP decision was voted through by its board with a large majority, despite earlier attempts at mediation by indie labels' body UPFI. UPFI GM Jèròme Roger says, "UPFI understands but regrets this decision."

He admits that "the Victoires are now in pretty bad shape" and that "it is quite difficult to go on" without SNEP, which provided the bulk of the artists and significant financial support. UPFI is adopting a wait-and-see stance, says Roger, but would favor a revamp of the Victoires' statutes and structures.

"The situation is in a deadlock," admits Eric de Bondy, who represents French authors' rights society SACEM on the Victoires board. "But we now have until June 18 to find an agreement." However, an added complication arose May 18, when French collecting society SCPP announced it was also withdrawing from the organizing body.

NOT THE FIRST

This is not the first crisis to affect the Victoires. In 1996, the best newcomer award was given to female artist Stephend, signed to a company operated by Denys Limon, who was involved in the production of the show. Victoires founder Claude Flèouter was forced to quit following a row over this but subsequently sued the Victoires. A tribunal in January 1998 ordered the Victoires to pay Flèouter damages of 3 million francs ($485,000).

Whitburn Charts Course For Fans' Summer Reading

Billboard

burn's 1998 Billboard Music Yearbook" and "Joel Whitburn presents Billboard Top 10 Album Charts 1963-1998" are now available. The former chronicles the entire story of each hit as it made its way up the charts. The Yearbook is the only resource with complete chart data for every 1998 hit. The 11 complete music sections include Pop Annual; The Billboard Hot 100; Bubbling Under Hot 100; Hot Country Singles and Tracks; Hot R&B Singles; Adult Contemporary; Mainstream Rock Tracks; Modern Rock

200 (Albums); Top Country Albums; and Top R&B Albums. Other sections include the No. 1 hits of 11 other charts, 1998's Best-

Selling Records, Top Videocassettes, Top Movies, Entertainment

Obituaries, and Song Title Section.

The "Top 10 Album Charts 1963-1998" contains a collection of more than 1,800 individual Top 10 charts from Billboard's weekly album listings. Following the album charts, the book is divided into sections including The Artists, an alphabetical listing, by artist, of every Top 10 album listed in the chart section; Notable No. 1s, which documents the slowest and fastest movers to the top and the biggest falls; Top 50 Albums; and Top Album Artists.

Actress Lopez Out Of Sight On Hot 100

by Fred Bronson

THERE HAVE BEEN PLENTY of artists who have reached No. 1 on The Billboard Hot 100 who have tried their hand at acting, but fewer actors who have dabbled in singing. The former category includes people like Diana Ross, Elvis Presley, Will Smith, Bette Midler, Michael Damian, Cher, Dolly Parton, Madonna, Whitney Houston, and Barbra Streisand. Counted in the latter category would be names like Shelley Fabares, Lorne Greene, Vicki Lawrence. Ricky Nelson, Tab Hunter, and the newest addition to the list, Jennifer Lopez.

The actress who starred in films like "Selena," "U-Turn,' and "Out Of Sight" is sitting atop the Hot 100 with her debut single, "If You Had My Love." The last two artists whose primary focus was on acting before going into a recording studio were Vanessa Williams ("Save The Best For Last" in 1992) and Martika ("Toy Soldiers" in 1989).

Williams, who first came into public view when she was crowned Miss America (and later deposed), appeared in the film "The Pick-Up Artist" in 1987, a year before she made her chart debut with "The Right Stuff." Martika landed a role in the movie version of the musical "Annie" when she was 12 and was involved in a performance company in Los Angeles for three years, which led to her being cast in the TV series "Kids, Incorporated."

As "If You Had My Love" is the successor to Ricky Martin's "Livin' La Vida Loca," Lopez is the first Latin artist to follow another Latin artist into the No. 1 spot since Gloria Estefan's "Coming Out Of The Dark" replaced Timmy T's "One More Try" in March 1991. This also marks the first time two No. 1 titles in a row have been distributed by Sony since Will Smith's "Gettin' Jiggy Wit It" followed Celine Dion's "My Heart Will Go On" in March 1998. And Lopez is the first artist to go to No. 1 with a debut single since Britney Spears topped the list just four months ago with " ... Baby One More Time."

One year ago this week, Brandy & Monica were in pole position with "The Boy Is Mine," which marked the first No. 1 hit for the artists, as well as producer Rodney Jerkins. Four months ago, Jerkins collected his second No. 1 hit with Monica's "Angel Of Mine." Now, in the short space of a year, Jerkins earns his third No. 1 with "If You Had My Love," which he also co-wrote. Jerkins is having a good week on the Hot 100, as another song he produced and co-wrote, Whitney Houston's "It's Not Right But It's Okay," vaults 32-21.

Two final thoughts on the new No. 1 song: It's the first Hot 100 chart-topper for the Work label, and it puts the chart pinnacle back in female hands. With 1999 almost half over, the only male artist to ascend to No. 1 this calendar year is Martin.

HE POWERS OF LOVE: Madonna enters the Hot 100 at No. 78 with "Beautiful Stranger" (Maverick/Warner Bros.), her first soundtrack single to chart since "Don't Cry For Me Argentina" from "Evita" peaked at No. 8 in March 1997. "Stranger" is from the much-anticipated sequel "Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me.'

Naughty By Nature

nineteen naughty nine NATURE'S FURY Selection #: 07822-19082-2

Are you still down with Naughty By Nature? Because their Arista Records debut 19Naughty9: Nature's Fury is going to blow you away! Naughty By Nature's new album is full of chemistry and high energy, offering the one two lyrical and verbal punch of Vinnie and Treach combined with the production wizardry of KayGee. From the soulful party vibe of "Jamboree" (featuring Zhane) and the late-night R&B flow of "Blu Balls" (with KayGee's proteges Nex.) to the rugged, dirty South-meets-Illtown vibe of the first single "Live or Die" (featuring Mystikal and Silkk The Shocker), Naughty By Nature continue to prove that they are one of the top Hip-Hop acts around.

BIO

From their nescent years as New Style, rocking Jersey talent shows, to their Platinum smashes like "O.F.P." and "Hip Hop Hoorey," from their trend-setting style to their groundbreaking appeal, Naughty By Nature have redefined what Hip-Hop can be. In the process, they have emerged not just as pioneers, but as true stars. At a time when "artists" are cooked up by a marketing department, Naughty By Nature have earned the respect of the community by working hard, keeping the faith and, most importantly, coming with the dope flow.
