ON THE INTERNET

A DECADE AGO, the Internet was the Wild West for radio. A new, untamed media ready for exploitation. An unprecedented avenue where stations could provide a visual complement to their programming, simulcast their on-air signals, even offer separate, co-branded side channels.

But costly streaming and talent fees combined with the absence of a successful business model tossed cold water on radio's Internet dream. Scores of stations subsequently killed their streams, and radio generally took a back seat on the Internet.

A recent survey shows radio virtually AWOL on the Web. According to the Media Audit, local newspapers have the leading Web sites in 74 markets surveyed, TV station Web sites have the largest audience in five markets, and sites operated by a combination of the two lead in two markets.

Radio not only failed to dominate in any of the surveyed markets, its sites hardly registered against those operated by newspapers and TV stations. Even radio's 800-pound gorilla, Clear Channel, acknowledges that some of its own sites are so poorly designed that their home pages "look like Times Square."

Meanwhile, Internet radio listening is on the rise—more Americans listen to Web radio each week (19 million) than satellite radio. (XM and Sirius have roughly 5 million subscribers combined.) And radio is under siege from an array of proliferating technologies. Nowadays, it seems like the only device that can't deliver branded entertainment to consumers is the toothbrush.

As the new-media explosion continues, the still-robust radio industry is coming to grips with the notion that, to survive, it must deliver content to listeners how and where they want it—not just from tall towers in big fields.

And so the radio industry is beginning to play catch-up on the Internet. After years of not streaming any of its stations on the Web, Infinity has finally joined the digital revolution, streaming all of its news/talk outlets and launching a couple of Internet-only music stations to serve market positions it abandoned (see story, page 5).

Recognizing it needed a Web guru to develop and execute a coherent long-term Internet strategy, CC lured Evan Harrison, the former GM of AOL Music and Radio, to be its executive VP of online music and radio. His goal: offer core programs and custom content on the Web—available on demand and as "appointment" content—that complement the company's local radio brands.

CLEAR CHANNEL STRIPS FOR YOUR PLEASURE

Late next month, select CC stations will begin promoting exclusive live interviews on their morning shows with artists scaling the charts. Atlantic's Rob Thomas, Columbia's John Legend, J's Gavin DeGraw and Hollywood's Jesse McCartney will be among the initial featured artists.

During the interview, the stations will air another exclusive—a stripped-down rendition of one of the artist's hits or a cover song recorded live by the artist just for CC. After it plays, the morning team will direct listeners to the station's Web site, where they can see and hear a free streaming mini-concert. Fans can watch one song at a time or the entire show.

Welcome to "Stripped," a benchmark in CC's unfolding Web strategy for its music stations. Modeled after MTV's "Unplugged" and the musical guest portion of "Saturday Night Live," "Stripped" is an exclusive, weekly, in-studio performance series that will be available on demand at CC station Web sites.

It will be shot in New York or Los Angeles with four cameras. "We're putting a lot of thought into what the set design is going to look like," Harrison tells Billboard Radio Monitor. "There's going to be a look and feel where, whether it's John Legend or Rob Thomas, you know that it's a 'Stripped' set."

Unlike Web music exclusives offered by AOL and Yahoo, "Stripped" will benefit from the on-air promotion and marketing muscle of CC's stations.

"It's really about taking advantage of the dual mediums, using the strength and power of radio to create a lot of excitement and really make it an event and then drive our listeners onto our Web site to watch it," Harrison says. "Then they can keep going back to get it on demand."

The company hopes to roll out a new performance every week, covering each format once a month. Some artists may be picked up by multiple formats. In New York, for example, top 40 WHTZ (Z100), AC WLTW (Lite FM) and even classic rock WAQX (Q104.3) could all conceivably air Thomas' appearance, though Q104.3 may use only select songs.

"Stripped" is intended for artists who already have a couple of songs established at radio. "Because they're breaking down their song arrangements in a way that people haven't heard before, it's an opportunity to create a completely new audience and shed a new light on that artist," Harrison says.

In addition to extending its brands online, CC has its eye on the $11 billion expected to be spent in online advertising this year. Advertisers are expected to spend $3.5 billion in local online ads alone.

"Stripped" includes avails for local and national advertisers. National buyers get a persistent "brought to you by" area directly within the media player and a 15-second video ad that runs before the performance. The local advertiser gets a banner area and a portion of the 15-second spot.

Many stations already have established successful, audio-only local performance series, such as triple-A KBCO Denver's "Studio C." By co-branding, the station could air a promo like "Live on 'Studio C' this week, it's KBCO's 'Stripped' with Gavin DeGraw."

Even before the launch of "Stripped," CC plans to increase by 100 the number of its stations streaming online, with the goal of having 300 stations streaming by May 1.

GOODBYE, TIMES SQUARE

CC station Web sites are in for an extreme makeover. "Come early summer, there will be a new look and feel, a more competitive aesthetic and user experience for all of our [music station] Web sites," Harrison says. Redesigns for news, talk and sports stations will come later.

The overhaul will involve better organization of site content, decluttering and "making hard decisions about what goes where," while taking advantage of site design best practices. Think of it as the cyber equivalent of the company's Less Is More mandate.

Each home page will have a prime spot where "a couple of things will rotate," such as a contest to win tickets to see Ryan Seacrest on "American Idol."

Prime real estate will also be devoted to station air talent and to exclusive content. The recipe includes local talent, local content, local news, locally branded national content (such as "Stripped") and interactive options.

Another element in CC's Web strategy is podcasting. "We're taking our own proprietary content that's often created by our morning shows and making it available in time-shifted format," Harrison explains. Missed "Phone Tap" on Z100? No problem. Head to z100.com, download it to your portable device and take it with you—along with the embedded advertising. The podcasting experiment will encompass a handful of stations before summer.

"Our new Web strategy is all about using the strengths of the local brands, which are so relevant on a station-by-station basis, to drive our listeners online for a complementary experience," Harrison explains. "Core to that is programming that's not available anywhere else."

The idea is to give listeners what they want, when they want it, regardless of the device they choose to access it on.

"When all is said and done, with all of the various choices and busy lives that consumers now have, we want to make sure that our brand loyalty is able to extend regardless of the device," Harrison says. "That means keeping listeners connected with their favorite radio stations when they get to work. Or making sure that kids without stereos in their rooms have an opportunity and a compelling reason to stay with us when they go to the Web."

WHERE'S THE MONEY?

With a staff of approximately 50 people, including four managers and assorted tech-types, the company's online music and radio department represents a sizable investment in the online space. So how will CC monetize it?

"Great programming will help migrate our audience from just listening on-air to going online as well," Harrison explains. "Advertisers are already chomping at the bit to associate with some of these unique programs. Our goal is to not only offset the costs but to turn it into an online advertising business."

Local station ad sellers will offer potential clients integrated packages that include radio and online campaigns. And by streaming in the top 25 markets, CC can sell national online advertising.

The company will also adopt the keyword concept for programming, promotion and advertising. Enabling visitors to access client info by entering a keyword represents a "huge opportunity" for local advertisers, Harrison contends.

Through a paid service being added this summer, station Web site visitors will be able to post classified ads.

Harrison says he has had preliminary conversations with Clear Channel Entertainment about creating programs that involve the concert division.

Using interconnectivity to share content across the company's platform is a mantra CC senior VP of programming Tom Owens has been chanting for years. Now it is being applied online. For example, the Rev. Jesse Jackson's recent interview with Michael Jackson on the former's Premiere-syndicated radio show was available for streaming at every CC radio station Web site one hour after it aired.

"Our goal is to simply take advantage of the content that we're creating behind the scenes and hand it over to the stations to make their own and to talk to their audience about it in the way that makes the best sense for them locally," Harrison concludes. "That is something Tom Owens started years ago. Online lends itself as the perfect interface for that content."

After strengthening its local station brands online, Harrison wants to add additional layers, such as side channels.

"If you're coming in to listen to a pop station, eventually you'll be able to expand to listen to more niche channels from there." He envisions streams devoted to the favorite songs of key air personalities or core station artists. And he sees efficiencies and integrations between high-definition radio side channels and online audio streams.

"As we look at side channels and splitting those frequencies, there are going to be opportunities to take advantage of both online and high definition," he says. ●●●

INFINITY: ON-AIR AND (FINALLY) ONLINE

THE THEME FOR Infinity's new marketing campaign is "How far will you go?" But for David Goodman, the company's president of marketing, the phrase also encapsulates Infinity's mind-set for the future.

"We'll go everywhere," he says. "We believe it's important that everyone—no matter how or where they get their media—has the ability to receive our stations, whether they're at a desktop, in their car or at their house."

Although late to the Internet compared with other radio groups, Infinity began to embrace the Web in late 2003 through a deal with AOL to stream five of its biggest music stations, including WXRT Chicago. The trend-setting triple-A showed up as the top streaming station at Radio@AOL on several occasions.

In December 2004, Infinity began streaming news WCBS-AM New York. "We saw tremendous success in time spent listening on the streamed version, and it went up each month," Goodman tells Billboard Radio Monitor. "This last month, I think the average session was 82 minutes."

In January, after stunning the rock world by flipping longtime modern station WHFS Washington, D.C., to Spanish as "El Zol," the company resurrected the station online at whfs.com and through AOL.

Pleased with a spike in at-work listening from streaming WCBS-AM and impressed with the size of the audience listening to whfs.com, Infinity began to stream 11 of its news and news/talk stations last month. At the same time, it upped WCBS-AM general sales manager Matt Timothy to VP of streaming media.

The Internet can help AM stations penetrate office buildings in downtown areas. One of the first stations to demonstrate how online streaming can improve an all-news AM's Arbitron ratings was Bonneville's WTOP-AM Washington, D.C.

"The success that WCBS-AM has had with time spent listening is predominantly coming from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., so we're very bullish on our ability to own that daypart," Goodman says. "Radio is clearly a natural medium for owning at-work. Throughout the day, there are natural listenership spikes, such as 3:30 to 5 in the afternoon, when people go online to check out traffic."

For years, Infinity shunned streaming. It took a confluence of factors to get the company to change its Web tune. One was new leadership. The other was the strong growth of broadband Internet usage.

"From a listener point of view, there's acceptance," Goodman points out. "We feel that we can succeed now. It's a brand-new day, and there's new leadership. And now everyone feels the timing is right to execute."

Goodman says the goal is to eventually deliver content to cell phones and PDAs. "We've been working on a number of initiatives that embrace mobile multimedia devices," he adds.

While streaming brings a variety of costs and issues, Goodman says, "Ubiquitous distribution is worth it." He adds that the company expects streaming to build audience and revenue while adding marketing opportunities.

"We have a real belief at this company in embracing technology and ensuring that we capitalize on the variety of ways in which content can get distributed today," he says. "You'll see more announcements in the coming months on a number of initiatives that will be happening at Infinity, streaming being one of them." —PAUL HEINE

PROGRAMMING YOUR HD SIDE CHANNELS

BY PHYLLIS STARK

THE RECIPE CHANNEL? The iPod potluck channel? Mother-in-law radio? All commercials?

These are just some of the ideas broadcasters are suggesting as potential formats for their additional signals once high-definition radio ramps up.

Billboard Radio Monitor polled a variety of broadcasters for their thoughts on the looming HD universe. One consultant, Keith Hill, quibbled with our use of the word “looming,” saying, “I think it might take a while.”

And media analyst Robert Unmacht of iN3 Partners says, “I really think we will see broadband delivery of audio to the car and other devices before HD ever makes it to a full rollout, and certainly before we see a full rollout of radios that can handle multiple channels.”

Others, meanwhile, noted that their own station’s HD conversion is just weeks or days away. They include Clear Channel’s WBCT Grand Rapids, Mich., and Infinity’s KMPS Seattle.

Citadel’s KIIM Tucson, Ariz., PD Buzz Jackson says, “I am looking forward to being able to expand our brand. Having extra digital channels, and making them free, will allow us to super-

“If we’re smart, our formats will be much more interactive and personal than anything we can offer now. Hopefully, once we have six or seven times the current available space for commercial inventory, we’ll recognize it as an opportunity to cut down the amount of commercial clutter.”

LISTENING TO YOUR MOTHER-IN-LAW

With all of those potential benefits in mind, Monitor asked broadcasters what they dream about programming or listening to on those additional channels, regardless of commercial viability.

So what are their guilty pleasures? Mariachi music? Celtic lullabies? Polkas? All bagpipes all the time?

Talk radio consultant Valerie Geller, not surprisingly, says she would program a personality or talk format, noting, “As always, it’s the stories as a listener that get me in the end.” Among her suggestions:

- Mother-in-law radio. “This channel would allow mothers-in-law to call in and complain about their kids’ marriages and give advice on how to do it the right way. All day. All night. All mother-in-law. All the time.”

Albright, meanwhile, wants to hear:

- The John Phillips Sousa/ Kent State University/Ohio State University/University of Washington marching bands channel.
- The Broadway show tunes channel.
- The “songs Jaye Albright thought were going to be hits but weren’t” channel.

Consultant Rusty Walker would enjoy a channel with “nothing but movie themes, all the great ones from the beginning of talkies all the way until today. Not soundtrack stuff, just the title, main, love or closing themes from all the great movies. It would be like spending all day at the theater, with time standing still, and I’d bet most of the tunes/melodies would be almost universally familiar across several generations.

“A commercial success? Not hardly,” Walker adds. “But . . . it probably makes more sense than the ‘all Sousa marches’ channel.”

Brenner has a few ideas too.

- “I like island music and would have fun with a channel like that. Hosts for the island channel would include Kenny Chesney, Jimmy Buffett, Alan Jackson and friends.”
- “How about the recipe channel, people sharing favorite

— ANY DARN WAY YOU PLEASE!

serve our audience’s needs and [give us] more opportunities to keep them on KIIM.”

“We are excited about HD,” says country KMPS PD Becky Brenner, whose station is expected to go HD by April 15. “Having CD quality and surround sound on FM, and FM quality on AM, will be awesome.

“Compatible formats for KMPS that would be easy and fun for us to do would be classic country and bluegrass,” Brenner adds. “The goal will be to choose one or two things that will do well and can generate a little extra money.”

Cromwell Radio Group president Bud Walters says, “We’d have to find some subniches that appeal to our core demographics. This could include some ethnic programming and youth talk.”

Active rock WYSP Philadelphia VP of programming Tim Sabean says succinctly, “I would look to put programming on that is compelling and unique and that would attract the largest available audience at that time.”

Country radio consultant Jaye Albright says it is about focus.

- “The wives, spouses and girlfriends who hate sports talk channel, since female appeal is the new industry buzz.”

- “The my kid and his/her friends are learning a musical instrument and have made a CD channel.”

“I absolutely love the idea of niche formatting and having access to as many channels as we can get,” Geller says. “It’s not about radio, ever. It’s about people, stories, music and life. The radio just gets it there. The more fun, the better.”

Consultant Bob Glasco grumbles that “the last thing most markets need is more clutter on the dial,” but he takes a light-hearted stab at some niche formats anyway. His ideas:

- “Every sales manager worth his/her salt will tell you if you play more commercials your ratings are bound to go up, so dedicate one channel to all commercials, all the time.”

- “Every GM’s wife or husband is a great programmer, so dedicate one to him or her so the format can finally be done right.”

- “And finally, one for the part-timers. After all, they know how to program better than any PD in the business. Just ask them!”

recipes 24 hours a day.”

- “I would love to do a ‘Tradio’ channel—one giant garage sale with people buying, selling and trading junk.”

- “With the popularity of reality TV, reality radio is probably not far behind. Local celebrities could wear microphones 24 hours a day and we would be able to monitor their life. How about ‘Bill and Melinda Gates: The Days of Their Lives?’”

As a fan of pop music from three decades ago, Hill says “a ’70s oldies station would get a lot of my listening time.”

Moving that idea forward one decade, WBCT OM Doug Montgomery wants to hear “the ’80s channel of songs that don’t test from artists you never heard of. We’ll start with the legendary Stan Ridgway and work our way through obscure Canadian acts like the Shuffle Demons and Thrashing Doves.”

San Diego-based Clear Channel regional VP of programming Jim Richards is into the formats with human names. “If I had multiple channels, I’d launch Jack on one, Dave on another and if I still had channels, Alice, Bob and Doug,” he says. “Then, I’d play whatever I want, not what the listeners want. Then, after making millions, I'd start an airline and name it Ted. Oh, wait, that one's been done. Oh well, United's bankrupt, so maybe I could buy it for a song."

ON THE SERIOUS SIDE

Unmacht takes a practical approach to programming his fantasy HD channels. "If I had a station, I would add brokered ethnic programming for two reasons," he says. First, "I would get paid for the time, and that is important as the potential audience is too small to sell general market spots. [Second], brokered programming generally aims at an underserved population which would have a reason to go out and buy the required radio to get this extra channel.

"If there is an extra channel I might look into donating it to a non-profit... especially if I can take part of the operating expense off my taxes as a donation," Unmacht adds.

"If I had to sell the channel myself, I would do travel information—guided driving tours, information about things to do in town, restaurants, hotels, sights, etc.," Unmacht continues. "These spots could be sold easily on an annual contract and the channel would only need weekly updating.

"There is not a lot of music programming that I can't get with better coverage from XM and Sirius, so I can't think of much I would want to see on a hard-to-receive device that costs a lot of money," Unmacht adds. "The limiting factor for music programming is how much the ASCAP/BMI/SESAC rates will be for the extra channel. If they cost as much as the main channel, we might not see much in the way of music on these extra channels. If they are cheap to license, anything might happen.

"With all the talk of iPods these days, maybe we could just plug a different listener's iPod into the channel each day and promote it as the potluck channel," Unmacht adds.

Hill says the additional HD channel should complement the "mother station." For example, a classic country signal alongside an existing mainstream country outlet.

Saga Communications executive VP Steve Goldstein agrees with Hill. "Each channel would be a derivative to the main channel," he says. "A classic rock might have a 'deep cuts' channel. A news/talk might have a weather/traffic channel." As for his dream format, Goldstein says he would listen to a comedy channel.

Sean Ross, VP of music and programming for Edison Media Research, notes that "in New York, the obvious use of an extra channel is country, not because I regard it as a niche that needs to be available via a special service, but just because there's no immediate prospect for it happening otherwise."

As for Ross' not-so-guilty pleasures, he says "they're almost all on the Internet already—British top 40, Canadian oldies, plenty of airchecks and a lot of the stations I've missed for years—particularly KKNG Oklahoma City—are back on the Internet these days. In this era of Jack/Bob, it would be interesting to see somebody try an updated version of 'We-Love,' Spike Lee's fantasy station from 'Do the Right Thing' that went from Miles Davis to hip-hop."

Country WPOC Baltimore PD Ken Boesen says, "If I had a bunch of channels—and didn't have to worry about paying the bills—I'd launch some niche country channels. One would be female-targeted and play all the songs women love but men hate and none of the songs women despise. I'd do the same for a male-targeted station. There are obvious choices like classic country, and we might want to do a rocker country—a place for all the songs that might offend the typical audience with sound or lyrics.

"Next on my list would be an authentic jazz station that plays only real jazz music," Boesen adds. "After that, an actual top 40 station. Back to the old format that includes the top hits in all formats.

"Quite possibly," Boesen admits, "I might be the only person who would listen to these channels."

XM SEEKS 'NATURAL' EXTENSIONS

BY KEN TUCKER

AS THE ELDER of the two satellite providers, XM Satellite Radio has a slight lead over its competitor, Sirius Satellite Radio, in terms of technology and available platforms. Delphi's wearable MyFi receiver is already available for XM subscribers who want to go that route. And XM will soon be integrated into Yamaha Electronics' home theater systems.

While the company is guarded about its plans for future platforms, XM chairman Gary Parsons recently noted that the company's objective is to permeate "cell phones, PDAs, MP3 [players] and the like"—especially by means of the new "connect-and-play" chip that links an XM antenna to a consumer product such as a clock radio or stereo amplifier. Parsons also told a CNBC audience that the connect-and-play chip "may be the first way that MP3 players and cell phones decide to add XM capability."

With a just-announced partnership that XM and AOL are calling "the world's largest combined digital radio network," XM executive VP of programming Eric Logan doesn't have to look very far to see what's in the future for his company.

As previously reported on billboardradiomonitor.com, AOL and XM have combined to launch an online radio service that will bring 70 XM channels to AOL subscribers, in addition to the 130 channels the service streams free to subscribers. There will also be a premium pay service available to Web users who are not AOL members.

Logan sees the XM/AOL partnership as a natural extension for the satcaster. "One of the things that we've learned is that when people are exposed to XM, they adopt, they subscribe to it," he says. He cites already existing deals with various car companies, as well as airlines Jet Blue and AirTran.

"All these relationships that we have are designed to have people experience XM," Logan says. "If people experience XM and XM satellite radio, they subscribe."

As for the AOL partnership, Logan says, "We are basically going to put some of our channels on their basic tier—their free tier—and their premium tier."

"We're not creating any incremental content for them," he continues. "We're [making available] the current content that we're [already producing]."

In addition, XM will integrate AOL programs Radio KOL, AOL Music Sessions and AOL Music Live into its satellite service.

And while the companies say they will work together to develop new programs and services for online and satellite, Logan was mum about what those plans included.

"It's all part of a bigger strategy that we have in terms of exposing people to XM," he says.

BLUE SKY IDEAS FOR SIRIUS

BY KEN TUCKER

WHAT YOU CAN EXPECT in the near future from Sirius Satellite Radio in terms of hardware is relatively easy to predict. A new generation of chip sets will bring smaller receivers and expanded portability.

By the end of the year Sirius will have its own version of a wearable receiver, similar to Delphi's MyFi, which carries rival XM Satellite Radio.

Beyond that, the crystal ball gets a little cloudy, but intriguing.

One potential platform is what Sirius VP of corporate communications Jim Collins calls "interoperable" radios, which will be able to pick up XM or Sirius. "The FCC, when they gave us our licenses, mandated that we work toward interoperability," he says.

While an interesting proposition on several fronts, and despite the fact that Sirius and XM have two independent teams working on finding a solution, an interoperable radio could be years away.

"The challenge is bringing the two technologies together in a common chip set, which is very difficult, or bringing two chip sets into a common tuner box, which could be an expensive proposition," Collins says.

Another wrinkle is that eventually Sirius would like to do more than stream only radio programming and data. "We're going to be able to transmit video, like cartoons or music videos, through the system into screens that are embedded into the [headrests] of cars," Collins says.

"What you're going to see is an evolution of services utilizing the existing infrastructure that we have and a utilization of variations of the hardware that we have," he says.

"It's certainly possible that there could be a split signal," Collins adds, "so that parents could listen to music while the kids watched videos."

Collins says that initially the company would probably start out with just a few streams and that a separate pricing structure is possible.

Something that you're more likely to see in the not-so-distant future is the evolution of data services for both companies.

"We both have digital readouts on our radios with music information," Collins says. "You can use that format to send sports scores, stock quotes, weather and traffic information, and both of us will be doing that."

"They do it already with certain makes of Honda vehicles," he says, "and we have a service that will be out there soon."

Without getting into specific plans, Collins says Sirius wants to expand across a number of platforms, including cell phones and digital music players.

"We would like to be, at some point, device-agnostic or technology-agnostic," he says. "We believe that the real attraction to Sirius, or XM, for that matter, is going to be the programming content and that the access device is going to be secondary."

"People will just want the content and won't care what the access device is," Collins adds. "As this business continues to grow, we believe that will be the case."

FOCUS ON THE FUTURE

M-SPOT: LOOKING FOR CELLULAR'S

THAT RINGING SOUND YOU HEAR may be your radio. It may also be your electronic wallet, portable gaming device and podcaster... oh, and it's also your phone.

MSpot is a new software program and service that turns cellular phones into radios that can receive live and on-demand streaming audio. At the moment, MSpot is available only to Sprint cellular customers who have a monthly "unlimited data" plan and are willing to pay $5.95 per month.

MSpot co-founder Daren Tsui tells Billboard Radio Monitor that he hopes to convince other wireless carriers to offer the service. "Basically, we have launched a radio service that has a combination of talk and music. At the beginning we're starting with 13 channels, but we're going to quickly expand."

MSpot service is accessible via the media player on select handsets. It is akin to satellite radio, Tsui says, but with the added value of interactivity. On the music side, there's an e-commerce application of selling ringtones or CDs. On the news side, there's the ability to receive background or in-depth information about a story that was heard.

"The phone is an interactive device," he points out, "and the next version of the software that we want to launch will allow you, for example, after listening to some music, to buy a ringtone or to buy a CD. If you're listening to a news clip from NPR, you can actually get additional text information. You can vote in a poll to see if you agree with a particular article or not. That kind of interactivity you can never have in a satellite environment."

Tsui's company has gained the "first mover" advantage in creating a streaming-audio application for cell phones. One reason MSpot was able to launch, he says, is the attention being paid to providing video on demand to cellular customers. "A lot of people are jumping on video, and we are working on a video project with a major movie studio, but I think that people are forgetting that you can do a very neat audio product, like MSpot, quickly. I'm actually quite surprised that nobody has come up with a service like this yet."

Another reason for MSpot's successful—and swift—launch is that so many content providers are focused on developing services for use on cell phones. Tsui says it only took a few months to craft deals with the likes of AP Broadcast Services, NPR and Sporting News Radio. "The great thing is that, [of] all of the content partners that we've talked to, everybody is so interested in the idea that the whole process is going really, really fast."

Perhaps the most important advantage for MSpot is the relationship with Sprint. "We've been working in the wireless industry since 1999," Tsui says, "so we know a lot of carriers. The whole idea behind the radio concept was kind of a partnership between us and the product-marketing departments at Sprint."

Dale Knoop, GM of multimedia services for Sprint, tells Billboard Radio Monitor that his company has been providing multimedia products for more than two years, and its TV phones have been available since August. "At the same time that we were working on our TV service," he says, "we were thinking about an audio-only service."

The deal with MSpot happened very quickly, Knoop recalls, with the time from first meeting to final agreement measured in weeks, rather than months.

"MSpot brings a set of content that we like," he adds. "We didn't have a dedicated channel for audio, but we liked the idea of radio on the phone."

MSpot offers live streaming, primarily from its music channels, along with on-demand news clips from NPR, AP Broadcast Services and Dow Jones' MarketWatch.

NPR content comprises "the 25 most popular stories on a daily basis," Tsui says, culled from such programs as "All Things Considered" and "Morning Edition."

AP Broadcast content includes business and sports news, as well as all of its entertainment coverage. Tsui says AP Broadcast provides "a constant stream of news clips," and "a lot of them are basically sound bites that other radio stations can insert at the top of the hour."

phones, in part because wireless carriers have made considerable investments in the wireless broadband network—but also because an audio service requires much less bandwidth than video on demand. "Basically, the carriers, in the last few years, have spent a tremendous amount of money building out their data infrastructure. As a matter of fact, you just heard about Verizon's offering of V-Cast on EV-DO [wireless broadband]. That speed is basically DSL speed. My service only requires a very small portion of that bandwidth."

Not everyone agrees that mobile wireless broadband is ready to support a heavy demand for MSpot's service. "Eventually, once cellular service is integrated with high-speed Internet access that is mobile, Internet radio over cell phones will become a real threat," says Kit Spring, analyst at brokerage firm Stifel Nicolaus.

Spring adds that the quality of mobile audio or video services like MobiTV and V-Cast is "just not where it needs to be yet" for such services to be a competitive force. Spring predicts that level of quality is "another five years away."

Tsui acknowledges that there are parts of the country where

Along with AP newscasts, Tsui says, "we grab everything that we believe is entertaining and compelling and we put that up. So there's 'Chip Talk,' there's 'Newsweek Perspective.'"

Some of the Sporting News Radio content is also streamed live, albeit with a time-delay of five to 10 seconds. That content includes "The Troy Aikman Show" (Thursdays, 5 p.m.-6 p.m.) and "The James Brown Show" (weekdays, 10 a.m.-noon).

As for the music channels, Tsui and his staff program them, but he says they are looking for partners to bring on certain genres. Discussions are under way, for example, "with a company that's offering house and dance. So we're going to look for those types of partners."

Tsui is confident that streaming audio will be seamless on cell cellular coverage is still "spotty" and that network performance can suffer if there is heavy demand for streaming audio or video. Ultimately, though, cellular providers' emphasis on delivering video to mobile phones means an audio service will have few problems, if any, he says. "Absolutely, we do fall into the constraints of, if tens of thousands of people all located in the same neighborhood block wanted to talk to the same [cellular] tower, yes, we're going to have a load problem. But I would argue that the carriers are very aware of this service, to the point that they're very comfortable launching video services, not just audio services. And this issue for them to scale is much easier than what satellite radio can do, because they can very quickly bring up another cell tower. Whereas for satellite radio, they'd have to launch another satellite."

Tsui hopes to convince other cellular providers to embrace MSpot, aiming to "get the majority of the U.S. carriers by the end of this year." He plans to help maintain demand for MSpot by making it accessible to older handsets.

"The interesting play here is that phones are starting to become a multimedia device," Tsui says. "You can just see that the stars are basically aligning. The network speed is getting better and better, and I think that you're going to see a lot of very interesting entertainment services that are going to be popping up on the phone."

"The phones don't have to be that sophisticated to get my service," he continues, "So, after we launch, we want to figure out the best way to get as broad a reach as possible on old and new handsets. Hopefully, by the end of this year, you'll be able to receive our service on both your old Verizon handset and your new Verizon handset."

THE NEXT, NEXT BIG THING SMART PHONE PODCASTING

PODCASTING HAS MOVED from MP3 players to the cellular smart phone, thanks to a software program designed to let a Windows-based smart phone download podcasts directly over the wireless network into the phone.

iPodderSP was developed and released in late February. Its designer and developer is Andrew Davey. "So far," he says, "there are no other applications that do exactly what iPodderSP does for [the] smart phone."

The program resides in the smart phone and functions much like an iTunes or Windows Media Player program, looking for content and then incorporating it into a managed playlist. A smart phone can surf the Web, so iPodderSP can retrieve any podcasts on the Internet that fit into the phone's storage capacity.

Because the smart phone is also a recording device, Davey says, the next logical step is to turn it into a podcast creator.

It's unclear whether the surge in podcasting is a fast-moving fad or the start of a real revolution. In either case, Davey says, "Most people do not realize the immense power they have sitting in their pocket. These are not just phones, but very capable computers that are just waiting for new applications to take advantage of them." —TONY SANDERS

ROCK

BY BRAM TEITELMAN PHOTOGRAPH BY J. SCOTT WYNN / RETNA LTD.

YOU DEFINITELY DIDN'T HEAR IT HERE FIRST, but the Internet is the future of radio.

While streaming terrestrial broadcasts was a common practice in the mid- to late '90s, there is a new model at play now: Some Internet-only stations have sprouted after their terrestrial counterparts have gone away, while others are streaming different programming from their broadcast sisters.

WXRK (K-Rock) New York's sudden format change from modern rock brought about the launch of its subsequent online station, K-Rock 2, which plays newer and more cutting-edge music than the current and former incarnations of K-Rock. And there are many more:

- Clear Channel has launched zetarocks.com as a peace offering to fans of former active WZTA (Zeta) Miami, which is now Hispanic.

- Y100rocks.com is the Internet outpost of former modern WPLY (Y100) Philadelphia, and is being run out of former jocks' houses, independent of former owner Radio One.

- Whfs.com exists as a channel on AOL Radio, even as WHFS is back on the air on nights and weekends in Baltimore after the Washington, D.C., modern rock leader was flipped to Hispanic.

All of these stations, while completely different, have one thing in common: They are keeping their brands or former brands alive while tapping into the potential of the Internet's forthcoming broadband expansion. "For the first time in 10 years, I actually feel like I'm participating in the future, not defending the past," Y100rocks.com PD Jim McGuinn says.

K-ROCK SPLITS THE ROCK

While WXRK's decision to launch an Internet station in the wake of adjusting its over-the-air format is the talk of the music industry, there is a precedent. Infinity's reasoning is the same as Greater Media's was (see story, below).

WXRK was "serving two masters," OM Robert Cross tells Billboard Radio Monitor, referring to a divided demo of which some leaned classic and others leaned current. "This is a way for us to split it into two, and super-serve the new music needs on the Web and [satisfy] the people who just want the best rock of the last 15-20 years in one place... It's new music on new media, and the older stuff on older media."

And WXRK's reach gives it a chance to cross-promote the online station to listeners that might not want Bon Jovi with their Beck.

"We have a unique opportunity being in New York on such a mammoth signal that we can pimp our new music channel to so many people," Cross says. "We've got a [huge] come here, so it affords us the opportunity to let people know what we're doing on the Internet and not just let it sit out there and have people discover it." Cross adds that his goal is to have K-Rock 2 act as almost a fully functioning radio station with its own promotions, contests and artist participation.

Infinity president of programming Rob Barnett says that K-Rock is a unique situation. "You've got to look at this as not a one-size-fits-all answer, but a market-by-market basis," he says. "We believe in modern and alternative and great rock. We're not

NET-ONLY STATIONS HAVE PRECEDENT

WHILE THERE ARE A NUMBER of Internet-only stations programmed by radio companies that have sprung up in the past several months, it is not an entirely new phenomenon.

In the '90s, when Internet streaming became possible, active WRIF Detroit started streaming iWRIF, a channel that was the aggressive yin to the terrestrial signal's mainstream-leaning yang. By concentrating on newer and more active music than the radio station, iWRIF was able to tap into younger audiences, much like New York's WXRK is attempting to do with K-Rock 2. It also allowed WRIF to own new music first.

Many Internet streams stopped when the passage of 1998's Digital Millennium Copyright Act made it cost-prohibitive. That wasn't the reason iWRIF ceased, however.

"It wasn't a legality thing that took it down, but the fun and buzz of an online side channel benefiting or blocking us in the market wasn't going to come to fruition," WRIF OM Doug Podell told Billboard Radio Monitor in 2003. "Online radio is not a threat, so at that point, it became too much work. It ended because it wasn't necessary anymore."

The situation at Cincinnati's woxy.com parallels that of Y100rocks.com in that they're both being operated independently by staff from their former terrestrial stations. When WOXY's signal was bought by new owners last year, the station remained modern, but became more mainstream than the indie rock and true alternative music that the station was known for. Original owners Doug and Linda Balogh wanted to keep woxy.com as an Internet-only entity, but couldn't afford to, so it went dark.

Two months later, however, some anonymous investors provided the money necessary to put woxy.com back online, bringing back a Web station that had a large online listenership beyond the Cincinnati area.

Since returning to the Web last July, woxy.com has flourished. "We just started advertising ourselves for the first time ever," MD Matt Shiv says. "We've bought ads in Filter magazine, Magnet magazine, and some banner advertising on [music criticism Web site] pitchfork.com." The station also threw a party at South by Southwest in Austin at which it broadcast live. Shiv says the station's March listenership was up 61% from the previous month, going up more than 100,000 listeners.

"This oddly legitimizes what we're doing," Shiv says. "There's been a few people that have done this before, but even when we came back, there were record people that said 'Well, it's Internet-only.' There's still people that don't get it, and I think a lot of labels are not paying attention to it, and haven't been. If we start seeing the Infinities of the world launching side channels of their product, that says something."

Shiv looks forward to the future, when Internet radio really picks up steam. "This next year is going to be really interesting," he says. "We just launched beta streams today of a new streaming format called AAC Plus. The compression allows you to have higher quality listening at lower bandwidth streams. We have a 24k AAC Plus stream that sounds better than the 64k MP3 streams that we offer. From what I've read, these 24k streams are going to be targeted towards the smart phones coming out. These 24k streams are going to be a big part of people being able to really get mobile with Internet radio."

interested in putting together a perfect formula and then forcing all of our radio stations to swallow it.”

Infinity’s handling of WHFS proves that there’s no one way to take a station online. After the Washington, D.C., station switched to Hispanic in January, AOL and Infinity partnered to create whfs.com, which is heard on Radio@AOL.

Jack Isquith, executive director of AOL Music, said that after WHFS flipped to Spanish, he was at a dinner where people were discussing about how important WHFS had been and the emotional connection it had for listeners in Washington, D.C., and Baltimore.

“It was brought up whether the station would be able to live online,” he says. “I got a call the following morning asking, ‘How doable is this?’ I was very enthusiastic about it, because that’s one of our big advantages. We can create a station from scratch and have it up and rolling in a matter of days, and we did it.”

WHFS (formerly WXYV) and whfs.com operate mostly independent from each other, but Pete Schiecke, AOL Radio programming manager for alternative and rock, talks to WHFS MD Pat Ferrise many times during the week. “He’s been, in a way, the consultant, making sure that whfs.com is well-representative of what WHFS was through the years and what it should be,” Schiecke says. “We talk frequently about what new currents are appropriate to add to the station, and go through the golds as well.”

While whfs.com doesn’t mention its Baltimore sister, Isquith says there is cross-promotion between the two. “For us, how whfs.com is promoting WHFS is more by amplifying the brand,” he says. “The majority of the production on whfs.com is

’HFS-generated, meaning their production director works closely through Pat and Pete to get that production onto whfs.com. Their big win is that they have all these people across the country, other than D.C. and Baltimore that are either learning or plugging back in with the ’HFS brand. In that way, both entities are promoting each other aggressively. There may be more things to come, but this is all new for us.

“Infinity and the WHFS folks have been great partners,” Isquith continues. “They’ve done a great job of making people aware of whfs.com. You can take a lot of musical chances when you’re on the Internet and still provide a mass-appeal offering. One of the big victories for both WHFS and AOL Radio is that there’s a radio station that can play a lot of new music and also play depth cuts by some of the most important modern bands in history. We don’t have to worry about fighting it out on a song-by-song basis against rock competitors that play a tight list that would make a terrestrial programmer think twice about playing a depth cut from Depeche Mode, R.E.M. or the Cure.”

WHFS PD Lisa Worden is happy with whfs.com, but is even more thrilled that the station she programmed in Washington, D.C., is back on the air at least part time in Baltimore.

“We were able to sign this on within a week of WHFS being turned Spanish, and I am so happy,” she says. “I would take this any day over just doing an online thing. AOL does all of whfs.com, but they’re a great image of what we do on the air here in Baltimore.” She adds that since WHFS isn’t on the air full time, it’s helpful to be able to recycle listeners to whfs.com.

DIY-100

On the last day before WPLY Philadelphia switched from modern to R&B as “the Beat” in late February, liners told listeners to visit Y100rocks.com. In addition to a petition that has since gathered more than 63,000 signatures, listeners could also go to Y100rocks.com, part of Live 365’s network of online stations. Since then, it has amassed 125,000 listening hours and 2.8 million page views. The people who signed the petition give Y100rocks.com more of a database than WPLY had.

McGuinn is one of four people working full time on Y100rocks.com. Six others, including former assistant MD/night jock Christine “Electra” Pawlak, work part time on the online station, which goes live about once a day. Artists including Hot Hot Heat, Graham Coxon and Taking Back Sunday have appeared live on Y100rocks.com.

“It’s been the most exhilarating and fun month of my life, in many respects,” McGuinn says. “In other respects, it’s been incredibly difficult. We’ve had to be very resourceful and rely on volunteerism, donations and kindness, but we’re up and running.”

Y100rocks.com has attracted several advertisers, including concert promoter Electric Factory, which has given it concert tickets to give away. “That’s all without us even picking up the phone,” McGuinn says. “Certainly, this Web site has already made more money than any Web site I’ve ever been affiliated with in radio.”

But while Y100rocks.com has more than paid for itself, it has not yet made enough money to pay the people working on it. “We’ll keep doing this as long as people want it,” McGuinn says. “If we can end up figuring out a way that a few people can make a living off it, then it could go on and become its own thing.”

The Y100rocks.com staff members have been enjoying themselves, running the station from various houses. “I could bring my laptop and a backpack full of gear and be on the air anywhere there’s Internet [access],” McGuinn says. Among the possible scenarios are doing broadcasts from public places with Wi-Fi or broadcasting from listeners’ residences. The city of Philadelphia recently announced an ambitious plan to equip the entire city with Wi-Fi, which would definitely benefit Y100rocks.com.

Despite the initial outpouring of support and listenership, McGuinn says Y100rocks.com is about five years too early to reap the full benefits of being an online station. “It’s really fun doing this, and it’s really great that there’s a loyal, dedicated following, but as prevalent as broadband is in today’s society, when you’re limited to listeners having to have broadband connections, that eliminates 90% of the public. It’s phenomenal that we have enough listenership right now to probably have a 0.4 in the Philadelphia ratings, but we’d have a lot more if we had a signal.”

McGuinn has a point. While at-work listenership of Internet radio is on the rise, until cars, cell phones and portable music players come equipped with broadband connections, it’s still a niche medium.

Y100’s Internet incarnation has certainly gotten people talking, yet Live 365 can only stream to 400 people at a given time unless they’re paying subscribers. Yet the fact that Internet radio has yet to gain critical mass actually works in its favor, according to WXRK’s Cross.

“As a 33-year-old that grew up on modern rock, I remember when modern rock stations were on the really shitty signal on the outskirts of town, and if you wanted to get them, you had to wrap tinfoil around the antenna,” he says. “This is sort of the modern equivalent to that. You used to have to work to get your modern rock, and it’s sort of come around full circle . . . The people that are most passionate about this are going to go find it on the Internet. The Internet is the mainstream right now. It’s really not a demotion for modern; we’re moving it onto a medium that’s much better suited to deal with the material.”

HIT THE FAST LANE OR GET RUN OVER ON THE

When ABC top 40 WDRQ Detroit recently flipped to 93.1 Doug FM, ABC Radio Internet director Robert Shiflet was responsible for updating the station's Web site.

Within minutes of the flip, a new site with the new name and logo was online. And although a note on the site said it was "under construction," the message to listeners and Web surfers was clear: A new radio station has come to Detroit, and you should check it out.

After years of existing as an afterthought—a place to "bonus" advertisers with banner ads or an additional outlet for the tech-minded night jock—station Web sites are coming of age.

Web sites as tools for programming and sales have been on broadcasters' "to do" list for years, but it may be past time to move them to the top of that list. Web sites can and will be a source of revenue. For some companies, like ABC, they already are.

It is worth noting that Clear Channel brought Web guru Evan Harrison over from AOL and plans to overhaul its stations' sites this summer. And, as recently reported, CC has announced plans for a Web-only concert series, "Stripped."

Infinity just launched K-Rock 2, a younger-leaning stream to complement the over-the-air programming of mainstream rock/modern hybrid WXRK New York. WHFS Washington, D.C., and WZTA Miami, both of which recently flipped to Spanish programming, have re-emerged as Internet stations (see stories, pages 4 and 10).

These initiatives are not simply a way to dispel listener complaints about stations that went away. Someone out there thinks that there is money to be made. And while Web advertising has largely been of the "value added" variety—a bonus to on-air advertisers—that is about to change.

The key is to take a hard look at your Web site and assess whether it is really serving your listeners and, as important, whether it is a place they want to spend time.

"Having an excellent site begins with the initial design," says Shiflet, who is also marketing director for ABC/Dallas. "No matter how many bells and whistles you have, if it's not easy to navigate, your site probably won't generate a lot of traffic. Likewise, if you don't keep the content current, there's no real need to visit often."

Greater Media/Boston director of information technology Robby Mossman agrees. "With any Web site, you are looking at a snapshot in time, and since this changes from month to month and event to event, I think a well-done site will generate more repeat visits."

Content is king, and the king of content is weather.

"We offer live radar," Shiflet says, "and in the spring, weather can be our largest single traffic driver on our Texas Web sites."

When bad weather causes closings, "the list can grow out of control for on-air," Shiflet points out. "So many stations are hitting the major school districts and businesses, then referring listeners to the Web site for the complete list."

While it is important to send listeners to your Web site, it's equally important to have them bounce back to your station. "Always try to have something on the Web site to drive the listener back to the on-air product," Shiflet says, "or make sure the 'listen live' button is easily accessible to reinforce that added feature."

When country WKML Fayetteville, N.C., midday host/webmaster Deano inherited the station's site, an unappealing design was not the only problem; it took days for new content to show up. "Working hand in hand with programming and promotions, I made sure that all information was updated immediately," he says. He also modernized the look of the site and added new links.

The result was a dramatic improvement in traffic. "In May of 2004, we recorded 5 million hits to our Web site, with over 7,500 separate individuals checking our home page every day," Deano says. When he had taken over the site five months earlier, it was averaging 1 million hits per month.

By keeping your Web site fresh, Shiflet says, you'll increase the number of return visits. "You don't reread a newspaper every day for a week or longer," he points out, "so why expect people to come back to your Web site if they've already read what is there? We try to treat the Web site like a newspaper that's instantly updatable," he says, estimating that the home page of news/talk WBAP Dallas is updated an average of 25 times per day, as news breaks.

"Content is critical," Shiflet adds. "Local news and information have no substitute. Whether it is concert listings and information for the music stations or sports scores and stories for the sports stations or hard news for the news/talk stations, don't overlook the value of local content."

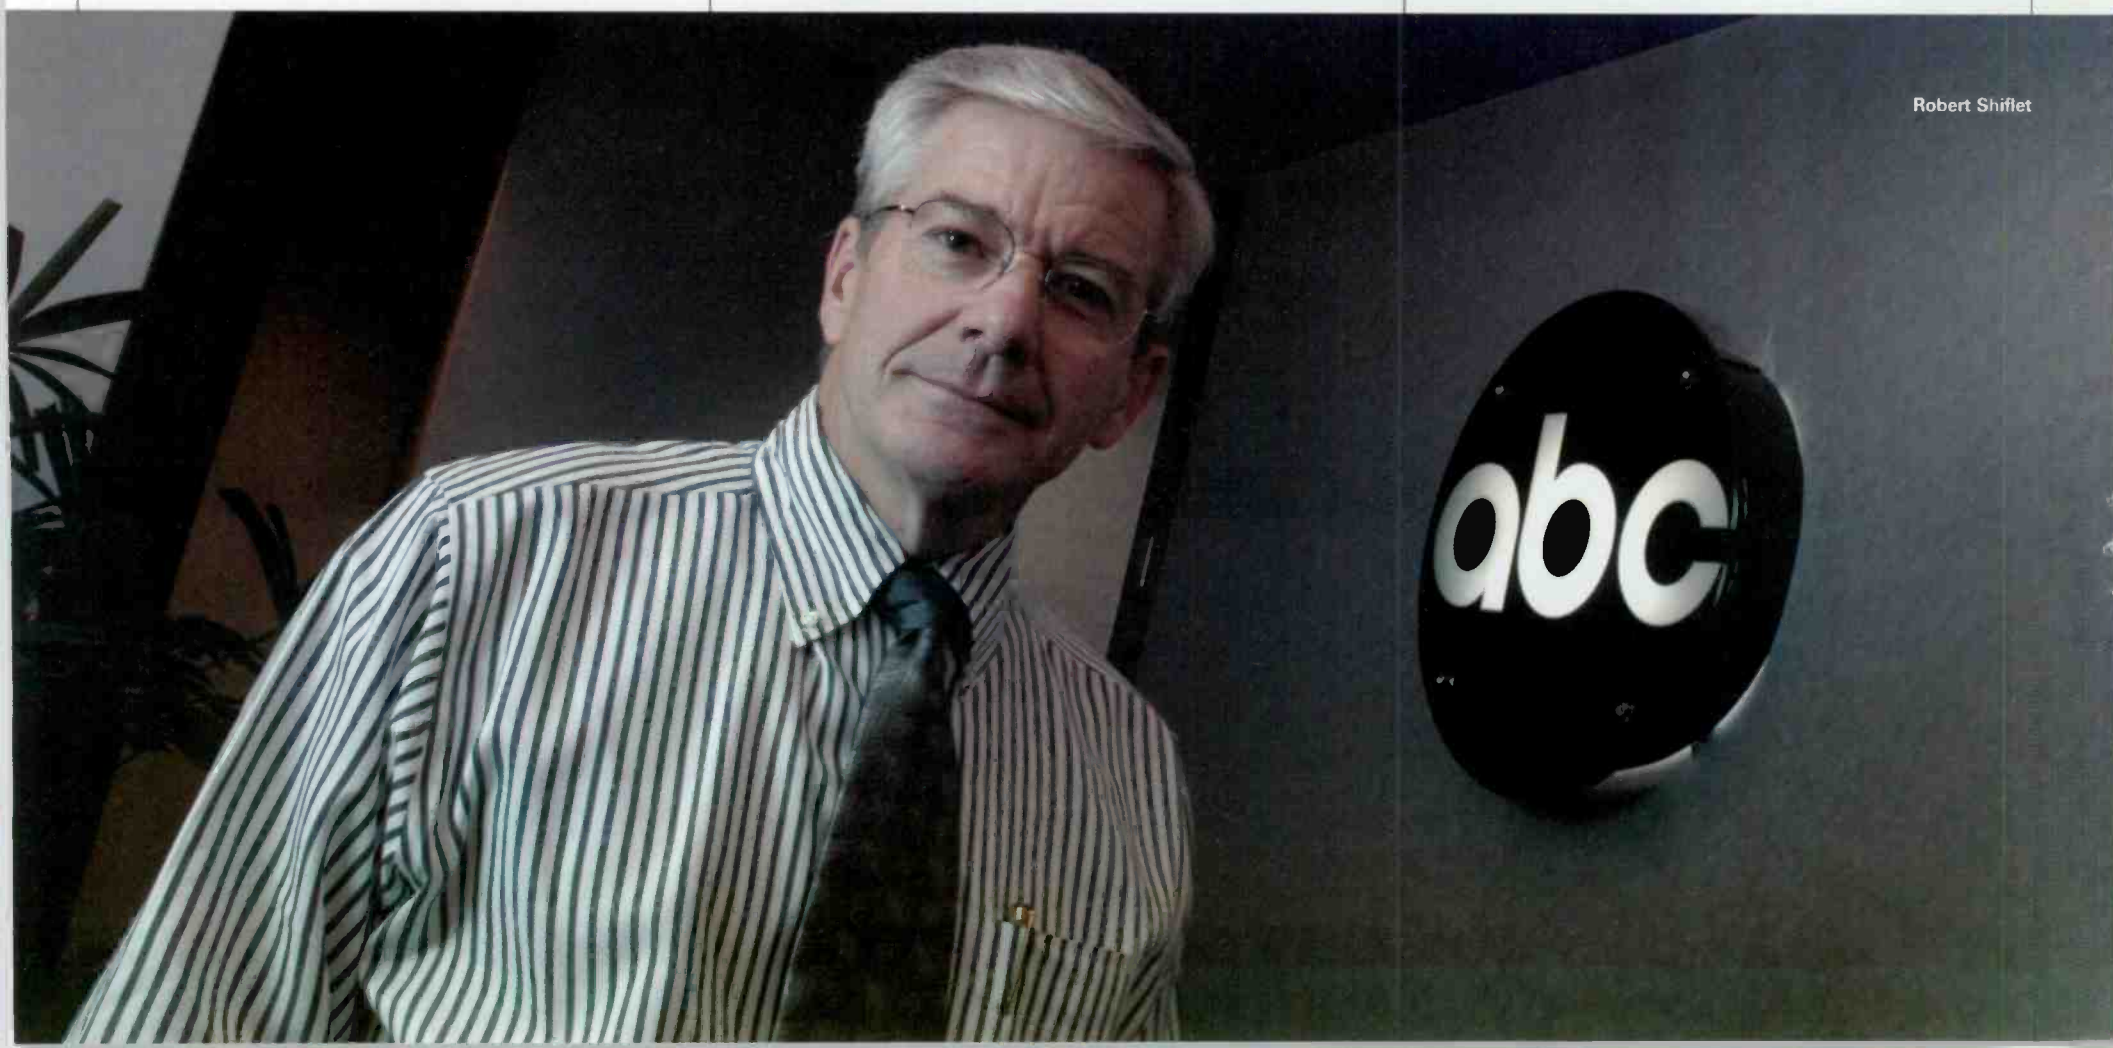

Shiflet believes stations need look no further than their own on-air content for material. He cites classic rock KQRS Minneapolis, which records its morning show, strips out the commercials and makes it available daily on demand.

"Many stations have on-air bits that could be and should be repurposed to the Web," he says. "WBAP has over 12,000 replays per month of some of their comedy bits."

Greater Media's Mossman says ease of use is important for Web sites: "Oftentimes we get caught up in the 'wow factor' and forget functionality."

Shiflet agrees. "Not everybody is interested in everything the radio station does, so give people an easy route to get to the information they want," he advises. "Once they get there, have plenty of information for them."

As an example, Shiflet points to the KSCS Country Fair, a day-long concert in Dallas. The station posts a list of frequently asked questions about the event on its site, covering topics like the performance schedule and what items are allowed into the stadium.

Robert Shiflet

Whether you do it formally or informally, Shiflet suggests getting input from listeners. "Radio stations could do a focus group on how to build a Web site and probably come out with a very nice site that would be well-used," Shiflet says. "After all, you're doing it for your listeners."

Easy access to station phone numbers, e-mail addresses and even maps is lacking on many radio Web sites. Our experts agree that a "station contacts" button or something similar is a basic element of a site.

"Having spent many years in the promotions department, I'm always concerned about on-air clutter," Shiflet says. "The Internet is a great partner. What's clutter on the air is content on the Web."

Shiflet says he remembers when stations spent hundreds of thousands of dollars on a station promotion "then tried to cram all the details into 30-second promos."

"Now, we hit the highlights then invite the listener to our Web sites for more information," he says. "Once there, we can provide as much information as the reader cares to read."

Deano says WKML uses a similar method: "Our tag line for promos . . . is 'If you hear us talking about it, you can get all the details at wkml.com.'"

A CONSISTENT IMAGE

"The look and feel of a radio station Web site should match the sound and feel of the station," Shiflet says. "WBAP . . . is a prime example. On-air we're promoted as 'the news and talk of Texas.' If you visit our Web site, you'll immediately see our logo, and directly underneath it you see that slogan. But, it doesn't stop there. Right under that, you see news. Not just headlines, not copy imported from a wire service—but local, state, national and world news."

Deano says communication is key to keeping a Web site in sync with its station. "There has to be a free-flowing stream of information to and from the webmaster," he says, "from everyone from programming and promotions to the sales and the air staff."

Bonneville/St. Louis Internet/new media director Matt Willenbrink agrees. "Our Web department is in constant contact with the programming staff of each of our stations," he says. "The Web department is just as aware of what is going on with the station as promotions and the on-air talent."

Perceived value is important. "Our programming staff views the Web as a critical tool to the success of their overall product and treat it as such," Willenbrink says. "When this happens, information just seems to flow pretty freely, making the on-air/online complement one another very well."

In addition, Willenbrink says, the company has developed a content-management system that allows jocks limited access. "They have the ability to update their own pages, on their schedule, while being limited in how that information is presented," he says. "This allows us to keep the sites fresh while not having to spend a ton of time each day doing just updates, which in turn allows us to work on the 'big picture' projects."

Including a "listen" button is another way to connect surfers to the station. Greater Media's Boston music stations each have a "now playing" feature on their Web sites that links visitors to what is currently on the air and allows them to use the company's online store to buy the song or the CD, Mossman says.

Sometimes a station's online image speaks louder than its content. "For a news/talk station, you probably would want a well-organized, neat appearance—while on a classic rock or alternative station you're probably going to want a little more of an out-of-the-box experience," Shiflet says.

Some stations, Mossman says, forget that the Web site is a branch of the station's image," Mossman says. "If you have a poor image on the Web site, you could give people the impression of a poor radio station."

Shiflet comes from the customer-service school of Web site management. "Allow the listener to provide feedback, then read every comment that comes in," Shiflet says, "and distribute it to the appropriate parties within the station."

"Try to respond to every e-mail with at least a word of thanks for sharing their feedback and telling them who their message has been passed along to," he continues. "We actually enjoy doing this, especially when we get those e-mails back from astounded listeners who never expected their e-mail to be read, much less to get a reply."

Happy listeners and happy surfers mean increased traffic, which should give your sales staff something to sell, and that makes a happy GM.

Obviously, it's also important to drive traffic to your advertisers. "I've found the absolute best way to use a Web site for connecting with advertisers [is to] drive customers to their business," Shiflet says. "And that works either by getting them through the door to their Web site or having them call the advertiser."

Though ABC generates revenue from its Web sites, you might not know it by looking at them.

"In radio you hear a lot lately about 'less is more,'" Shiflet says. "That's been a Web philosophy of ours for quite a while."

A random scan of ABC Radio sites confirms his claim. While many station sites are littered with ads, the ABC sites average three to four well-placed ads, plus an advertiser index that includes phone numbers, addresses and, for clients that request them, links to their Web sites. "That's our added value," Shiflet says, "and our advertisers seem to appreciate the clean, noncluttered look we've developed."

Not that it's easy to break the added-value mold of putting anything and everything on the site.

"Clients routinely throw it up to our sellers that 'So-and-so radio station gives us the Web as added value,'" Shiflet says. "However, so-and-so radio is probably not generating a penny from their Web site, probably doesn't keep it current and compelling, and has little traffic."

The cost of designing and maintaining a Web site varies greatly. Do you have an in-house team or do you hire or barter for the services of an outside company? Does the station or group have a dedicated webmaster or does someone in promotions wear that hat? Is your company big enough to cut a national deal with a company like FirstMedia Works? Are you streaming content?

Regardless of cost, our experts agree that dedication to a quality product is key.

"A station is hurting itself financially by not having a good site," Willenbrink says. "So many stations spend hundreds of thousands of dollars each year to hire consultants [and] test music, logos, slogans, voice talent, etc. They want to make sure their on-air product is perfect—only to leave the Web site up to some promotions person who just happened to take a class or two on HTML in college."

Willenbrink isn't disparaging promotions people, merely pointing out that Web design "isn't what they were trained to do, and they shouldn't be expected to."

"If a station wants a good Web site," he adds, "it needs to be considered as important as station marketing or the on-air product." ●●●

RANTING ACROSS THE WEB

COMMENTARY BY KEN TUCKER

I SCAN DOZENS OF RADIO AND NONRADIO WEB SITES EACH DAY, partly because it's my job and partly because I'm somewhat of a Web geek. But regardless of why I do it, I'm constantly amazed at how poorly radio stations are serving those who wish to reach them via the Internet.

Streaming issues aside, I'm dumbfounded by how difficult many stations make it for their Web customers. It's clearly not a priority for many of them.

I'm not sure why, as millions of people are, like me, increasingly reliant on Web sites for information. I'm not talking about teens, either. I'm 42 years old, and I'd much rather do a Google search than dig out a phone book.

Here's a quick test: Google your station's call letters. If your site is not among the first results that pop up—and especially if it is listed below a German software site—you need to make it easier for listeners to find you.

Just this week, I came across a station in a large market that didn't list a single member of its airstaff—not even the morning team—on its site. Just as bad, the PD listed had left the station two months ago. Another site listed a GM who had been gone for six months.

As I write this, I have the Web site of a small-market station open in another window.

The station changed formats this week, but the Web site still describes the old station.

I have a simple question: why?

It's not as though we're living at the beginning of the Internet age. The Web is up and running and growing facial hair (unless of course, you think of the Internet as a woman, then . . . nevermind).

And it's not as if listeners/Web surfers are the only ones being mistreated. One site asked potential advertisers to fill out a form. Wait a second—someone may be interested in advertising with you and you don't even give them a phone number to call? Is business that good?

On another site, it was easier to find the "Babe of the Day" than the station address. (OK, after looking at the "Babe of the Day"—and the "Babe of the Day" archives—I really didn't care what the station address was, but you get my point.)

These are just a few of, sadly, many examples of poor "websmanship," but forget about my opinion. The dollar is mighty, and your Web site will soon be a source of revenue—if it's not already. Shouldn't you give it the same attention you give your on-air product? ●●●

TAKES THE LEAD WITH MULTIPLEX ROLLOUT

BY CHUCK TAYLOR PHOTOGRAPH BY TED KAWALERSKI

While the 2,000 radio stations that committed to high-definition radio conversion in January raised the heat on the burgeoning technology to a steady simmer, National Public Radio is ready to burn, baby, burn.

With its Tomorrow Radio initiative, NPR has committed to pioneering one of HD's most potentially enriching features: the ability for a station to air multiple channels of programming over a single frequency.

And they are putting their money where their mic is: Affiliate WFAE Charlotte, N.C., became the first station in the nation to test live "multiplexing" the first week of April. The outlet broadcast its main audio channel with two additional, supplemental channels.

In total, 58 member stations are set up for HD radio so far, with 312 committed to conversion by the end of the calendar year. A grant from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting should bring that total to about 500 stations by the end of 2006.

With partners iBiquity Digital, Harris Corp. and Kenwood, that puts NPR at the forefront of the HD revolution.

HD radio, of course, is seen by many in terrestrial radio as their increasingly less secret weapon in the battle against satellite and Internet radio's multitude of highly niched formats. It is also a potential diversion against the increasing ubiquity of iPods.

High-definition broadcasting will not only level the audio playing field by bringing CD quality sound to FM radio and FM audio quality to AM, but it will unleash a potential gold mine of new revenue through multichannel capability. FM stations will be able to transmit up to a half-dozen dedicated side channels of new programming with their original signal. There is one problem, however: Signal degradation increases dramatically with each additional channel, making it doubtful that stations would go beyond two or three additional channels.

PROGRAMMING BLOCKS CONTINUITY

Since NPR is non-profit, its motivation to invest in HD multicasting stems from the network's isolation in most cities. While Clear Channel or Infinity might have as many as eight stations serving a multitude of audience tastes, public radio is usually limited to one outlet per market, resulting in a mish-mash of block programming that often has no single focus.

"It has been something of a holy grail for public radio to try and find a way to deliver additional programming channels," says Mike Starling, NPR's VP for engineering and operations and the driving force behind its HD initiative. "We have a large number of markets with one full-service public radio station and they try to be all things to all people, which is not the way that people best use radio. All of our studies over the past 15 years support the idea that listeners want some consistency.

"All digital technologies theoretically offer the possibility of multiplexing and for us, multiple program streams was Project 1 in our Tomorrow Radio revolution," he adds. "We now realize there is a full series of things that are quite intriguing to radio's long term."

The Federal Communications Commission has tracked NPR's progress. Last month—convinced that all is steadily moving forward—it streamlined the process for any terrestrial station, including commercial FMs, to experiment with multicasting. Essentially, a station only needs to send a written request to the commission. Starling calls it a "regulatory endorsement."

MORE THAN POSSIBLE

Tomorrow Radio was initiated in January 2003, before the hardware for HD radio even existed. When the FCC gave a thumbs-up to testing of in-band, on-channel digital audio and mentioned the potential of multicasting, "it became our mission to demonstrate that this was possible," Starling says.

NPR then formed alliances with its partners: iBiquity, which developed and solely licenses HD technology; Kenwood, for design and the implementation of unit features; and Harris, a leading manufacturer of audio transmission equipment.

"Right now, we're working on additional initiatives to take the supplemental audio channels a little further," says Hal Neller, Harris' manager of public radio initiatives. "When you add a channel, audio quality drops from 96 kb/s to 64 kb/s. You add another and it drops to 32 kb/s. That still sounds decent, but it gets subjective. Is it CD quality? No. But it sounds better than a typical audio cassette."

MUSIC HERE, TALK THERE

As NPR ramps up its multiplexing capabilities, it will distribute programming to affiliates via satellite. That will allow a station to broadcast, for example, its traditional FM stereo signal—formatted, let's say, with classical music—with a parallel digital signal that simulcasts the classical format in HD 24/7, a secondary HD stereo signal that focuses on jazz and a third, lower-quality digital signal that airs news/talk.

"We want to offer a substantial variety of options for stations to deploy in their markets," Starling says. "People tuning in to those channels will finally have an expectation of what they will be hearing, instead of tuning in at 4 o'clock each day for a specific block because that's where stations could fit it into the schedule."

Scott Hanley, GM of NPR affiliate WDUQ Pittsburgh and a member of the NPR Board of Directors, says, "Tomorrow Radio is a great long-term benefit for better serving listeners. We've had to target different types of programming during different day-parts. But some folks are die-hard fans of either jazz or news, but not necessarily both. For them, this technology is the answer."

Listeners will need to buy an HD receiver, which could be the technology's greatest challenge. So far, 10,000 HD units have been sold, with prices ranging from $500 to $1,000. However, RIVERadio is expected to make a tabletop model available this summer for less than $250. CEO Richard Skeie assures that the radio will be "small and sexy."

In addition, NPR is working with four manufacturers to arrange group buys of up to 50,000 HD multicast receivers, which its stations will either give away or offer to listeners at reduced cost or as a gift for contributing to public radio.

"We're working through every formula we can think of," Starling says. "We want to come up with the right mix to build and grow this market."

CRITICAL MASS

He estimates that HD radio could reach critical mass by 2008, "once we have gotten into the high seven figures in receiver unit sales. It will be a five-year overnight success story."

Part of HD's success, Starling adds, depends on manufacturers designing their products with savvy. "We want to present consumers a rich environment," he says. "The 'hip' factor has to help drive the digital product. We've got to be clever and creative about what we put up there and design the most elegant and intuitive interface we can."

Features could include artist/title text displays, weather and traffic information, sports scores . . . really, anything onscreen that a station deems entertaining or informative.

Starling notes, "As commuting times continue to lengthen and people are in their cars longer, I think that real-time traffic displays will become part of every station's business. Stations can be competitive by color-coding roadways or offering customized routes of travel. It will be terrific."

He also expects units to have a TiVo-like feature, allowing listeners to tune in to "Car Talk," "Prairie Home Companion" or "Morning Edition" at their leisure, as well as interactivity that will allow the audience to buy, buy, buy.

NPR director of music Ben Roe offers, "HD radio is about more than additional programming. We are discovering that HD radio is an entirely new radio art form."

REVENUE POTENTIAL

While the investment is about $130,000 to install HD equipment at a station, Starling believes that multiplexing revenue is within striking distance.

"With a lot of additional programming streams, you develop niche markets, which are intensely loyal. That allows for smart marketing to those niches. I think there will be significant revenue potential," he says.

Obviously, there is much work to be done before HD radio and multiplexing become standard. But Starling maintains that the future looks awfully bright, despite the competitive threats already looming.

"There are certainly emerging competitors in the audio landscape, but there are 260 million listeners tuning in to radio every week," he says. "On the other hand, I strongly caution against complacency. The best way to guard against new electronic media eroding [terrestrial radio's] share is to be proactive. We have to provide a lot more choices that enrich the experience.

"We're trying to move the needle as soon as possible," he adds. "This is a multiyear project, but the sooner we start, the sooner we'll arrive." ●●●

THIS WEEK IN DATA. For complete charts, there's always more at www.BillboardRadioMonitor.com

THE SPIN

BY ANTHONY COLOMBO, WADE JESSEN, PATRICK MCGOWAN AND MINAL PATEL

LEGEND TO CHARTS

Charts are ranked by detections except for Latin, Christian, Gospel and Country charts which are based on audience impressions, computed by cross-referencing exact times of airplay with Arbitron listener data.

● Songs showing an increase in detections (audience for Latin, Christian, Gospel and Country) over the previous week, regardless of chart movement. A song will also receive a bullet if its percentage loss in detections (audience for Latin, Christian, Gospel and Country) does not exceed the percentage of monitored station downtime for the format. Exempting the Country chart, a song that has been on the chart for more than 20 weeks will generally not receive a bullet, even if it registers an increase in detections (audience for Latin, Christian, Gospel and Country). Country titles which decline in audience but increase in detections will also receive a bullet if the total audience erosion for the week does not exceed 3%.

◎ AIRPOWER: awarded to songs appearing in the top 20 on both the Airplay and Audience charts for the first time with increases in both detections and audience. Airpower awards do not appear on the Latin and Christian, gospel charts.

↑ GREATEST GAINER: awarded to the song with the largest increase in detections (audience for Latin, Christian, Gospel and Country).

+ MOST AIRPLAY ADDS: awarded to the song registering six or more detections at the most stations for the first time this week.

TIES: A song with a gain in detections (audience for Latin, Christian, Gospel and Country) over the previous week is placed first if tied with a song with a decline over the same period. When tied songs are each gaining detections (audience for Latin, Christian, Gospel and Country) or each losing detections (audience for Latin, Christian, Gospel and Country), the song being played on more stations is placed first.

RECURRENT RULE: Songs below the top 20 (top 15 for adult top 40, AC, modern AC, adult R&B, heritage rock and dance) become recurrences and are removed from the chart after 26 weeks. Country titles move to recurrent after 20 weeks if they rank below No. 15 and are losing audience.

⊕ Nielsen BDS certification for airplay of 100,000 detections on all monitored stations, including satellite and national networks, across the U.S. and Canada. Numeral following symbol indicates multiple level of 100,000 detections.

★ Indicates title earned Hit-Predictor status in research data provided by Promosquad.

Playlists are listed in order of TSA weekly cumes, beginning with the highest-cuming stations. Cumes are updated twice yearly following the release of the spring and fall Arbitron surveys.

A+ AIRPLAY ADDS denotes songs with 6 or more detections at station for first time this week.

IMPACT! Songs at Airpower level and below with a gain in detections or with a percentage loss in detections equal to or better than the monitored downtime in the format.

★ INITIAL IMPACT: Indicates song's first appearance on the Impact! page.

BACKSTREET BOYS RETURN WITH CHART'S TOP DEBUT

After a three-year absence, Backstreet Boys make their return to the Mainstream Top 40 chart with "Incomplete."

The track bows at No. 32 and earns Greatest Gainer honors with the second-largest one-week increase this year (1,245 spins). The only song to post a greater increase in 2005 is "Get Right" by Jennifer Lopez, which gained 1,478 spins in the Jan. 14 issue.

"Incomplete" marks the Backstreet Boys' 15th appearance at Mainstream Top 40 and extends their lead as the group with the most charted singles. They've scored eight top 10 hits, including two No. 1s, "I Want It That Way" in 1999 and "Show Me the Meaning of Being Lonely" in 2000.

CHESNEY CHIMES IN WITH ANOTHER NO. 1

Kenny Chesney achieves his eighth No. 1 and his first in about a year as "Anything but Mine" (BNA) gains 907,000 audience impressions and steps 2-1. Chesney last saw top ink with "When the Sun Goes Down" (with Uncle Kracker), which spent five weeks at No. 1 starting in the March 26, 2004, issue.

Although this is Chesney's first chart-topper since then, he has had a couple of stints as runner-up. His "I Go Back" peaked at No. 2 in July, as did "The Woman With You" in November.

Meanwhile, a No. 59 bow by Shooter Jennings doubles the number of current chart songs by second-generation country artists. Jennings, son of Country Music Hall of Fame member Waylon Jennings, debuts with "4th of July" (Universal South), which features a cameo by another Hall of Famer, George Jones. The younger Jennings joins new MCA Nashville duo Hanna-McEuen in the family circle, as the duo appears at No. 43 with "Something Like a Broken Heart." Cousins Jaime Hanna and Jonathan McEuen are the sons of Nitty Gritty Dirt Band founding members Jeff Hanna and John McEuen.

With Game's Climb To No. 1, 50 Cent Makes It Three Straight Atop R&B/Hip-Hop

The Game earns his second consecutive No. 1 on the R&B/Hip-Hop chart with the 3-1 move of "Hate It or Love It." 50 Cent, who is featured on this track and the Game's prior No. 1, "How We Do," racks up his sixth No. 1 by ending the five-week run of his own track, "Candy Shop."

Since "How We Do" preceded "Candy Shop" at No. 1 on the R&B/Hip-Hop list, 50 Cent becomes the first artist in the chart's history to appear on three consecutive No. 1 tracks.

Farther down the list, 50 Cent brings on his fifth concurrently charting single, as "Just a Lil Bit" debuts at No. 34. The only other artists to chart five simultaneous singles at R&B/Hip-Hop are R. Kelly, Kanye West and Ashanti. 50 Cent is the first of this group to accomplish the feat twice, as he had a handful of titles on the list for four straight weeks in spring 2003.

With "Just a Lil Bit" moving 18-15 on the Rap chart, 50 Cent becomes the first artist to account for one-third of the top 15 titles on that chart.

WIND-UP PUTS THE 'ACTIVE' IN ACTIVE ROCK

Wind-up becomes only the second label to land three debuts on the Active Rock chart in the same week as Seether leads the way with the chart's top entry, "Remedy," at No. 33. Alter Bridge's "Broken Wings" at No. 37 and Breaking Point's "Show Me a Sign" at No. 40 follow "Remedy," which also takes the chart's Greatest Gainer and Most Airplay Adds awards.

The only other label to have three debuts in the same week is Interscope, which did it in the July 23, 1999, issue with Days of the New's "Enemy," Rob Zombie's "Superbeast" and Smash Mouth's "All Star."

Wind-up also has the week's only Active Rock Airpower with Submersed's "Hollow" at No. 16. In its 24th week on the detections chart, its journey to Airpower status is the longest at Active Rock, easily eclipsing the 18 weeks Jet's "Are You Gonna Be My Girl" needed to reach that level in January 2004.

Songs are blind tested online by PromoSquad using multiple listens and a nationwide sample of carefully profiled music consumers. Songs are rated on a 1-5 scale; final results are based on weighted positives. Songs with a score of 65 or more are judged to have Hit Potential, although that benchmark number can fluctuate per format based on the strength of available music. HitPREDICTOR column

SIMPLE PLAN scores at Mainstream Top 40 this issue with its new single, "Untitled." This is the track's first HitPredictor appearance and the band's third HP title. Simple Plan is following its own pattern with the new single. Lately, the rock group fares better in the predominately female formats of Mainstream Top 40 and Adult Top 40, both here and on the airplay charts.

Though the band has had HitPredictor picks at Modern Rock in the past, its recent songs are going straight to Mainstream Top 40. That is not a bad thing. The recent success of other rock groups at Mainstream Top 40 (Green Day, Hoobastank, Switchfoot, etc.) bodes well for Simple Plan and "Untitled."

One such rock song that has yet to find its stride is "Be My Escape" by

A Band With A Plan

Simple Plan's New Single, 'Untitled,' Follows In Footsteps Of Prior Tracks

Relient K. Despite strong HitPredictor scores at Mainstream Top 40 and Adult Top 40, this song has yet to crack Billboard Radio Monitor's charts in either format. "Escape" is working at some stations, like WNOU (Radio Now 93.1) Indianapolis. Given the success of this sound at the format lately, other top 40 stations could do well to follow suit. The same could be said for the slightly heavier sounds of Crossfade's "Cold" and Papa Roach's "Scars." Both tracks are building very slowly at top 40 despite huge success in other formats and high HitPredictor scores.

The R&B/Hip-Hop column greets two new residents this issue. Lyfe Jennings earns his first HitPredictor star with the smooth R&B ballad "Must Be Nice." Beanie Sigel also scores here for the first time. New single "Don't Stop" earns high marks, thanks in part to featured guest Snoop Dogg.
