Broadcasting 1971 Yearbook

Quick guide to sections

Information in this YEARBOOK is divided into homogeneous sections as described in the boxes at right. Here's how to locate a section rapidly:

Hold the YEARBOOK in your left hand. With your right hand bend the book back so that the black markings on the right edges of the pages appear. If you wish to find a page in the A section, for example, place your right thumb over the black bar to the right of the letter A at upper right on this page and riffle through all pages containing a similar black bar in the same position; at the end of the sequence of marking will appear the first page of the A section. The same procedure can be used to find the beginning of any other section, starting with your thumb on the black bar on this page to the right of the letter of the section you wish to locate.

Program - American Opera "The King's Henchman" on the Air Tonight

Five decades ago man's continuing effort to extend the horizons of his knowledge and understanding took a quantum leap with the birth of radio broadcasting. Some thirty years later it leaped even further when pictures were added to sound. At CBS we are proud to have been on the springboard on both occasions: on September 18, 1927, when the CBS Radio Network on its opening night presented the first broadcast of an American opera. And again on March 20, 1948, when the CBS Television Network went on the air with the first television performance of a major symphony orchestra.

Ever since these beginnings we have been trying our best to enlarge the horizons of man's spirit and understanding—whether by bringing him the sound of music, or the sight of man on the moon.

1970: the threshold of a new era

Amid economic instability and government threats, a communications revolution began to take shape

Some may remember it as a time for celebration: It was, after all, the year to celebrate broadcasting's golden anniversary. Others may prefer the traditional doom-and-gloom rhetoric of industry spokesmen: It was an economically uncertain year in which cigarette advertising was ordered off the air, large chunks of prime-time network programming were ordered off the air, politicians seemed determined to order each other off the air, and some segments of the public cast an increasingly critical eye at whatever managed to get on the air. Yet most participants and observers seemed to share a tacit conviction that neither of these standard reactions quite captured the significance of 1970. For, above all else, the year was a transitional moment, a preparation for changes that could usher television and radio into a new golden age—or relegate them, in their present form, to the pages of history.

Those who live only in the present (or the past) might find such a perspective too distant to warrant the serious consideration of practical men. But those who include a vision of the future in their definition of pragmatism could not fail to be impressed by what happened in 1970. At long last, the much-heralded revolution in communications appeared to be getting off the ground.

▪ The FCC came forward with what it called a "Public Dividend Plan" for CATV—an elaborate set of rules designed to permit rapid growth of effective cable systems all over the country. Some sections of the plan became part of the commission's CATV rules, some were proposed rules—but all were part of a single conception of cable as a potential source of original programs, two-way communications, specialized programs for individual markets, and available channels for use by special groups. The commission banned cross-ownership of CATV and television stations in a market, ordered networks out of the business entirely, and invited comment on the extent to which radio stations and newspapers should be permitted to own cable systems. The plan also required cable systems to help subsidize noncommercial television, to pay copyright owners for the use of their material, and ordered systems with more than 3,500 subscribers to begin originating programs in 1971. Whatever the ultimate disposition of the plan, it was clear that cable played a key role in the FCC's scenario for communications.

▪ The White House took the initiative in resolving the long-dormant domestic-satellite question when it recommended early in 1970 that the FCC encourage wide-open competition in the field. The commission was not obligated to accept this recommendation—but in essence, it did. It invited applications from any one who could meet the economic and technical qualifications and could show a real public need for the proposed service; at the same time, it required all applicants to answer a number of questions on the future of satellites. Among the questions was the old problem of whether to authorize special systems for cable and broadcasting, or a multipurpose system that could handle both, or some other kind of system. At year's end, there were several applications yet to be filed, and the issue was very far from resolution—but after years of debate and delay, the events of 1970 seemed by comparison to be a wholehearted plunge into the future.

▪ A diehard group of congressmen tried, and failed, to push through a bill that would have significantly—perhaps fatally—gutted the FCC order authorizing nationwide, over-the-air subscription television. Led by Representative John D. Dingell (D-Mich.), architect of the bill, and supported by House Commerce Committee Chairman Harley O. Staggers (D-W. Va.), the congressmen attempted to set restrictions that would have made operation of a pay-television station a difficult, if not hopeless, endeavor. The legislative proposals—couched in the terms of the FCC order but going far beyond them in particulars—were reported out of the House Commerce Committee but died in the House Rules Committee. The failure of this House bill, combined with the Senate's apparent lack of interest in tinkering with the FCC's standards on pay TV, indicated that the service was finally on its way to becoming a reality. A further step toward that day occurred when Zenith Radio Corp. filed for permission to operate a subscription station.

▪ Perhaps the most eagerly awaited, potentially revolutionary, and presently unsettled field is that of video recordings. The number of video cassettes presently in use is minuscule, and the equipment has not been adapted, in price and design, to the home market—but its potential has captured the attention of national magazines and, by extension, the general public. 1970 witnessed the production of several hundred cassettes for institutional use by CBS, which gained an early foothold in the field through development of its EVR (electronic video recording) process. Under an agreement with CBS, Motorola began manufacturing recorders. Other firms, such as Ampex and Sony, were preparing to enter the field with slightly different kinds of recordings, and were exploring the possibility of devices that would permit the consumer to make his own recordings of over-the-air television programs. The possibilities were so varied and the field so wide-open that only one fact emerged clearly from 1970: Somehow, in some form, video recording will play a major role in the future of communications.

▪ International satellite communications, the first breakthrough in the communications revolution, continued to progress during 1970. In one of the most elaborate of all coverage attempts, an estimated 900 million viewers viewed live coverage of the World Cup soccer matches in Mexico City. In countries such as Canada, India and Russia, work on national satellite systems moved ahead. The only major disappointment of 1970 was the failure of an international conference on the future of Intelsat to reach agreement on the future administration of international satellite affairs.

■ While the technological revolution bubbled up from beneath the surface, a new government agency with great potential power to influence that revolution came into being. The Office of Telecommunications Policy, an executive-branch agency set up to give the White House a more direct voice in communications policymaking, was in fact given such a broad mandate that some observers feared an intrusion into FCC affairs. Its director, Dr. Clay T. Whitehead—a 31-year-old Massachusetts Institute of Technology graduate whose academic background embraces engineering and management—assured the doubters that OTP had no such intention. At the same time, however, he made it clear that he intended to use the agency's considerable power—and that he intended to use it in the service of a total communications policy involving a wide variety of services. Compared to the FCC—which until recently had been focused almost exclusively on television, radio and Ma Bell—OTP was sometimes made to sound like a doorway to the technetronic society. The role it will actually play is still uncertain, but its concept of communications represents yet another sign of impending change.

Taken together, these developments promise a transformation of communications. But meanwhile, down on the ground, the new technology is not a reality. There is no way to predict exactly what its effect will be. And for the moment, broadcasters still find themselves confronted with the problems of successful but heavily regulated businessmen who are now officially regarded by law as "fiduciaries" of a scarce resource, charged with a public trust. The pressures generated by these roles were very much in evidence during 1970.

The problems were not primarily economic; as businessmen, broadcasters did not exactly suffer a Great Crash. The industry did level off, reflecting the sluggishness of the entire economy in 1970—but many other industries might have envied broadcasting's prosperity. Both television and radio did the largest volume of business in their history, according to a BROADCASTING magazine survey. The survey showed that in television, network advertising rose 2.8%; spot was up by 1.8%, and local advertising gained a healthy 13.2%. Over-all, television revenues totaled over $3.37 billion, a 4.2% gain over 1969. Radio was up 2.0% in network, 8.8% in spot, and 5.3% in local advertising; over-all, the industry collected more than $1.27 billion, up 6.2%. TV-set sales declined somewhat, but rallied during the fourth quarter of 1970. Although both TV and radio felt the pinch of rising costs and decelerating increases in revenues, they more than held the line.

The government's impact on broadcasting was another matter. It was in Washington that broadcasters faced many of their most pressing problems.

As 1970 opened, it was already apparent that Congress would ban cigarette advertising from the air. A drawn-out battle the year before had ended in clear victory for Senator Frank E. Moss (D-Utah), the Mormon leader of congressional anticigarette forces, and the events of 1970 were a mere mop-up job. President Nixon signed the cigarette bill into law in April, condemning the commercials to banishment on Jan. 2, 1971. Over $230 million in revenues went along with them.

Congress very nearly effected another major alteration in broadcast advertising—of the political variety. Both houses approved a bill that would have established ceilings on spending for political broadcasting by candidates for President, Vice President, Congress and governor, while at the same time requiring broadcasters to provide lower rates for the ads they did carry. The bill would also have repealed the equal-time provisions of Section 315 for presidential and vice presidential campaigns, but most broadcasters were unwilling to accept that carrot in exchange for the bill's other restrictions.

Unlike the cigarette-advertising measure, however, the political bill met with the displeasure of President Nixon, who found it an inadequate and discriminatory answer to the problem of campaign spending—and who, some felt, had little enthusiasm for the idea that partial repeal of Section 315 would open the door to a "Great Debate" in the 1972 campaign. When his veto of the bill stood up by a margin of four votes in the Senate, representatives of both parties promised to work for broader campaign-spending reform in the 92nd Congress. That move met with promises of support from broadcasters.

But while Congress talked a great deal and acted every now and then, the FCC under Chairman Burch quietly dealt with every bit of unfinished business it could find, and then added some new business of its own. When Chairman Burch was asked at a press conference to pinpoint the most significant development of his first several months in office, he replied: "The fact of activity." Few long-time observers of the FCC would have been inclined to dispute that statement.

The commission was everywhere. It cleaned out a five-year-old proceeding by ruling that, effective Oct. 1, 1971, network-TV affiliates in the top-50 markets would be limited to three hours of network programming during one evening of prime time. It voted to prohibit the owner of a full-time television or radio station from acquiring another in the same market; at the same time, it proposed a much more sweeping rule that would eliminate existing TV-radio combinations as well as newspaper-broadcast crossownerships. It decided to permit land-mobile radio to share the seven lowest UHF channels with television in the 10 largest urban areas, and at the same time reallocated upper-band frequencies, including channels 70-83, to the land-mobile services. It launched a major study of the effects of conglomerate ownership of broadcast properties. It plunged into the issues of CATV and domestic satellites. All these major issues had been gathering dust at the commission until Chairman Burch marshalled the agency's resources and produced one action after another. The chairman himself was sometimes in disagreement with the decisions his colleagues reached, but he was determined to get the agency moving.

Of all these decisions, the "prime-time access rule" had the most immediate impact. No sooner had the rule been adopted than broadcasters everywhere began a search for new program material to fill the half-hour void left by the commission's decision. Although the rule itself applied only to the top-50 markets, its effect extended throughout the industry, since networks were disinclined to produce programing that would only be seen in smaller markets. To ice the cake, the commission limited networks' foreign syndication and ordered them out of domestic syndication entirely. Court appeals of these rules were pending at the end of 1970, but it was generally acknowledged that even if the courts overturned the rules, the decision would come too late to affect the 1971-72 season.

Not all the FCC's actions caused alarm in the industry. One, in fact, was a source of considerable relief: Early in 1970, a commission policy statement stipulated that licensees who could demonstrate "substantial" service to their communities would be immune to the threat of competing applications for their facilities. The statement was an effort—and a successful one—to neutralize the effect of the commission's 1969 decision in the WHDH-TV case, wherein the license for Boston's channel 5 had been awarded to a competing applicant. That unprecedented decision had touched off a chain reaction: During 1969, eight competing applications were filed, and broadcasters had feared chaos in renewal policy. The policy statement junked WHDH-TV as a renewal precedent and stemmed the flow of competitors for existing licenses.

However, anyone who thought the policy statement would be enough to call a halt to public activism was quickly relieved of that illusion. The broadcast-reform movement, a growing force during the late nineteen-sixties, simply regrouped and changed its tactics.

A key reform issue in 1970 was that of public access to the media. A growing number of groups—from established organizations such as the political parties, to issue-oriented committees on pollution and the war—tried to use the FCC's fairness doctrine as a wedge to get their own views on the air. The resultant confusion threatened to engulf the FCC in an endless series of interpretations and reinterpretations of its own loosely constructed policy.

Dissident groups, who felt that their views were inadequately represented on network broadcasts, had been pressuring broadcasters for some time—but the spark that really ignited 1970's fairness rhubarbs was provided by the President himself. Mr. Nixon used prime time on several occasions to report to the American people, and many observers felt that his appearances went beyond disinterested presidential statements into the realm of political orations.

The Democratic National Committee raised the issue in a petition asking the FCC to rule that broadcasters may not, as a matter of policy, refuse to sell time to "responsible entities" for the discussion of political matters. Later, the DNC asked for a ruling that appearances by the President should be presumed to be "controversial" and "of public importance," whether he delivers a prepared statement or appears at a news conference. It asked that broadcasters be required to seek out and present spokesmen for contrasting views, free of charge.

The next major initiative came from the private sector. CBS President Frank Stanton announced that his network would permit the opposition party to express its views at regular intervals throughout the year, in programs to be titled "The Loyal Opposition." The excitement generated by this bold step rapidly faded as one new fairness problem piled upon another. After the first Democratic "loyal opposition" broadcast in July 1970, the Republicans asked for reply time of their own. Meanwhile, antiwar groups were asking for time to answer the President's addresses on Indochina, and supporters of the administration were asking for time to answer the antiwar groups, and so on, ad infinitum.

The commission cut loose with a package of fairness decisions late in the summer. It ruled that antiwar spokesmen should be granted time to answer the President, because of the number of speeches he had made on the war; that broadcasters may not arbitrarily decline to sell time to political parties for fundraising appeals, but may decline to sell time for discussion of political issues; that administration supporters were not entitled to reply to senators who had bought time to appeal for support of their "Amendment to End the War"; and that the Republican National Committee was entitled to reply to the Democrats' "loyal opposition" broadcast.

This last ruling led to the cancellation of the "opposition" concept, and CBS went to court to oppose the FCC's decision—but the entire debate had raised once again the question of public rights of access to the media: whether such rights existed, and if so, what effect they would have on the limited First-Amendment freedom presently accorded to broadcasters.

The citizens' groups which have led this new surge of activism have taken seriously the assertion that the airwaves belong to the public. In addition to raising specific fairness questions, they have consistently filed petitions to deny license renewals throughout 1970. Many of these filings have been drawn with considerable skill, by attorneys who specialize in public-interest law.

And their activities have not always been conducted before regulatory agencies or courts. More and more, citizens' groups have engaged in private negotiations with broadcast owners in an attempt to change existing practices in programming and employment. The threat that hangs over a broadcaster's head in such confrontations is that the protesting group will file against its renewal unless the demands are substantially met. In some cases, such as those in Memphis and Atlanta, activist groups have threatened stations all over the city with petitions to deny.

Finally, one of these confrontations ended in the commitment of a large sum of money by a threatened broadcaster. Early in 1971, a citizens' group represented by the Citizens Communications Center, a Washington organization, got Capital Cities Broadcasting Corp. to commit $1 million over the next three years to upgrading its programming and hiring practices. In return, the citizens dropped their opposition to the transfer of several Triangle Broadcasting Co. stations to Capcities.

While public groups sought to add their voices to the totality of broadcast programming, there were changes going on within the newsrooms—and these, too, were related to pressures that originated from within the administration. A survey conducted by BROADCASTING magazine showed that attacks on the media by Vice President Spiro T. Agnew and other administration officials had contributed to a climate of fear and caution within broadcast news departments. Although the major news organizations were grimly determined to proceed as before—and some felt that the uproar generated by the Vice President's remarks had produced some healthy self-examination along with its less desirable effects—the dominant tone was one of apprehension.

It was not the Agnew attacks alone that had generated this mood. The Justice Department played a role when it began to issue blanket subpoenas for reporters' notes and out-takes, for use in judicial proceedings. The practice became so widespread that angry reporters accused the department of treating the press as an "investigative arm of government," worried about the drying up of news sources, and vowed to go to jail rather than permit their material to be used in court. Ultimately, the department backed down and issued some conciliatory guidelines, in which it stipulated that subpoenas could be issued only by the attorney general himself, and then only under extraordinary circumstances. But although the issue was quieted somewhat, it did not disappear; the guidelines were less than many newsmen would have hoped for, and the mood created by earlier subpoenas was not so easily forgotten.

One government action during 1970 was heartening to newsmen who cover Washington. The House of Representatives lifted its ban on broadcast coverage of committee proceedings, under strict conditions. It was a narrow victory, and there was little evidence that the House's long-standing distrust of broadcast coverage had thawed completely. However, a majority of the congressmen felt that it was time for the House to accept electronic journalism as the Senate has for years. By the end of 1970, both houses had at least talked about the possibility of admitting cameras to the floor of Congress, which has been closed territory except on such unusual occasions as the State of the Union message.

As 1971 began, there was yet another governmental threat to broadcast programming and advertising. This time, the target was children's programs; and once again, the push came from a citizens' group.

Action for Children's Television, an organization launched by a group of Boston housewives, had been publicly calling for massive reform of children's TV ever since FCC Chairman Burch assumed office late in 1969. Among their goals: a flat ban on commercial sponsorship of children's programs, and fixed schedules of programs designed for specific age groups. In other times, such radical plans might have been dismissed out of hand. However, ACT found a sympathetic listener in none other than Chairman Burch, who has publicly expressed his own concern about the fare offered to young people.

The result was a broad FCC inquiry into children's television. The commission asked for comment on questions ranging from the endorsement of products by children's air personalities, to the definition of children's programming itself. The commission proposed no rules, but in labeling its action a notice of proposed rulemaking as well as inquiry it left itself the flexibility to adopt rules if it decides to do so.

The FTC's entry into the children's issue capped a year in which it became a formidable presence in government regulation. First under Chairman Caspar W. Weinberger (who reorganized the agency and breathed new life into it before departing for a higher government job), later under Chairman Miles W. Kirkpatrick (who once led an American Bar Association study that sharply criticized the trade commission), the traditionally sluggish FTC became a lion on consumer issues, particularly advertising.

Faced with this mountain of governmental activity, and with increasing criticism from within its own industry, the National Association of Broadcasters undertook a massive reorganization. It has established three new departments—government relations, industry relations and public relations—and, early in 1971, appointed executive vice presidents to head each one. Their collective job is to sharpen NAB's ability to ward off the challenges from government and segments of the public.

The brightest hope for NAB, and for the broadcasters it serves, was evidence that television and radio continue to receive devoted attention from a majority of Americans. A survey conducted late in 1970 for the Television Information Office showed that television had widened its lead as the most trusted news source among all media. Early in 1971, figures from Nielsen and the American Research Bureau showed a huge growth in television audiences. Radio was enjoying such successes that many knowledgeable observers were heralding the arrival of its "second golden age." Moving into its second half-century, this public acceptance was perhaps broadcasting's principal source of stability as it prepared to meet the challenge of radical change in communications technology.

Radio billings 1935-1969

Figures for the years 1935 through 1967 are net time sales by stations and networks after all frequency and promotional discounts but before deduction of commissions to agencies and representatives. Figures for 1968 and 1969 were computed under a new formula and represent total amounts paid by advertisers for the use of broadcast facilities. They include commissions paid to advertising agencies and representatives and payments for broadcast time and programs, materials, facilities and services supplied by broadcast stations and networks in connection with the sale of time.

Will 1971 give CATV a green light?

FCC hearings scheduled for March could unveil answers to problems that have held up progress

In March 1971, the FCC was scheduled to commence hearings on what is expected to result in the final form of CATV in the U.S. To cable operators that move is like the sun popping out from behind a long, long period of leaden clouds.

What the cable TV industry sees in these hearings is movement. For more than two years, the cable industry has complained that it has been frozen because the commission has stopped the fledgling industry from expanding to what its members claim is full growth.

The FCC hearings are planned to diagram the form of CATV to come. How the commission decides the questions it faces will in fact decide what will finally be painted on the canvas that was first begun in 1948 in the hills of Oregon and Pennsylvania. Basically, the question is whether CATV will be permitted to grow under a light regulatory hand, or whether the regulation will be strict—as most of the broadcasting industry hopes.

The government hearings are to consider such fundamental issues as the impact of CATV on TV broadcasting in the first 100 markets, as well as in the other communities of the nation. Also to be determined are such other factors as the separation of ownership of CATV hardware from control of program content; the relationship of regulation among the FCC, the states and local communities; whether CATV's future must include such services as channels for local government, including school systems; whether channels should be leased to outsiders; whether a minimum number of channels shall be required from each system.

Such other issues as two-way communications on the cable; program origination and advertising; community "access"; the substitution of commercials; the feasibility of the proposal that cable systems pay a percentage of their gross to the Corp. for Public Broadcasting as an aid to noncommercial broadcasting; and finally, and equally important, what form a settlement of the copyright issue shall take.

Those FCC hearings will see a new form of presentation, panels of proponents and opponents arguing among themselves and responding to commission questions at the same time. The commission rarely has utilized this format in hearings. The commission hearings were to start March 11 and run for a full week, although not necessarily consecutively.

For two years, since December 1968, the cable-TV industry has claimed it has been in a freeze. It was on that date that the FCC imposed restrictions on the importation of distant TV signals which, to the majority of cable TV operators, is the lifeblood of their business.

Cable TV, from its inception, primarily has been a reception service, providing for a fee video programs to those TV viewers who failed to receive good signals, due to distance or terrain. Almost from the start, it was the ability of CATV to provide more than merely local TV programs that led to its rapid growth. It is the move toward limiting this element of its service—a move frankly abetted by TV broadcasters who desire to constrict CATV to its original service—that has placed the cable industry on its current growth plateau during the last few years.

In 1950 in the first unofficial census, there were an estimated 70 cable systems serving a minute 14,000 subscribers. As 1971 began, there were, according to BROADCASTING's new CATV SOURCEBOOK, 2,799 individual cable systems serving 4.5 million homes in 4,487 communities in the U.S.—with 30,709,547 people living in areas where CATV is operating.

If the FCC's resolution of the issues is tolerable to CATV, then the next 10 years, according to cable industry prognosticators, are likely to see an investment of between $2.5 billion and $3 billion for new and expanded cable systems. On the same basis, by 1980, industry sources see some 5,000 cable systems in operation, serving between 25-million and 30-million homes, and with annual revenues running about $4 billion, and a net worth of about $15 billion.

Even as the FCC began in earnest to grapple with the CATV problems—with the answers expected not earlier than the end of 1971—there were signs of relief.

The distant signal ban, for example, was lifted early this year, albeit in a single instance. The commission told a cable system in the Philadelphia area that it could resume carrying four independent New York TV stations, 90-miles away, on an experimental basis. The condition, however, was stringent. The system was told that in order to take advantage of this waiver of the policy it must put into operation the commercial substitution plan that is one of the mainstays of the proposals being considered by the commission.

This ingenious plan requires the CATV operator to substitute commercials from local UHF stations for those in the programs of the distant stations he carries.

In granting this experimental, one-year right to the Falls township, Pa., system (which serves 1,400 subscribers), the commission noted that approval was solely for the purpose of determining whether the substitution plan would work.

The plan has been called technically unfeasible and an economic monstrosity.

The commission also told the cable system that the importation of the New York stations must be limited to no more than 2,200 customers. The system had told the commission that, since it had been forced to cease the carriage of the New York stations, it had been operating at a total loss of $200,000.

The other recent sign of an easing of the FCC's regulatory hand came late in January 1971 when the commission told cable operators that those systems due to begin program origination that had less than 10,000 subscribers could ask for waivers—and, most importantly to cable owners, they need not commence this service until the FCC acts on the petitions.

Under its 1969 order, the commission had imposed local program origination requirements on all cable systems with 3,500 or more subscribers. Although cablecasting, as the CATV industry calls program origination, has been promoted heavily by industry leaders, many cable TV owners have been loath to engage. To them it means expenditures for equipment and staff, with no sign of added income.

One aspect of the program origination requirement that is aimed to ease the economic impact for operators, however, is approval by the commission of the sale of advertising in these programs.

The program origination order is also under legal challenge. Midwest Video Corp., an Arkansas-based multiple-system owner, has asked a federal appeals court in St. Louis to find that the commission does not have the authority to impose this requirement on CATV systems. Interestingly enough, argument was heard in this case on the same January day that the commission issued its partial relief.

But even as signs of a lightening of FCC requirements appear, other problems crop up.

For years states have cast covetous eyes on cable TV. Originally, only local municipalities were involved with CATV, granting franchises and setting standards. Then more recently, the FCC entered the picture, but throughout all of the commission's activity, the principle that local communities would continue to issue authorizations was implied.

Only five states actually have imposed their sovereignty over cable TV. These are Nevada, Connecticut, Vermont, Hawaii and Rhode Island. But early this year, the New York Public Service Commission told Governor Nelson Rockefeller that it should regulate CATV. The PSC report claimed that cable TV is a utility and that it ought to impose conditions regarding technical and construction standards, financial qualifications and operational requirements.

In Illinois, that state's commerce commission has been holding hearings for several months on the same issue. Other states, California, Maryland and Massachusetts, for example, are said to be due soon to start inquiries along these lines.

Needless to say, the CATV industry is vigorously opposed to such moves. It claims that that sort of authority is already in the hands of the FCC and the municipalities. Why add another layer, it asks.

Stimulating the interest of some alert state public service commissions, have been hints of under-the-table deals involving cable companies and local politicians. Such charges have been amorphous and totally word of mouth. Early in 1971, the first full-blown scandal in the CATV industry broke into the open. A federal grand jury in New York 000, said that the trial on the indictment would show that it had been subjected to extortion by local officials who threatened to destroy the investment there.

If convicted, each defendant faces a maximum five-year jail sentence and a $10,000 fine.

Teleprompter, after its merger with H&B American, is the largest cable TV system in the nation. Its 137 systems serve a total of 350,000 subscribers.

Teleprompter's merger with H&B American, an $80 million transaction, is an indication of virtually the only significant activity that has been going on in CATV in the last year. CATV's once brisk growth rate has indeed been slowed. Once-frenetic franchise seeking has subsided; expansion has been sluggish. Although the number of mergers has not been large there have been a significant upswing in this area. The latest was the $7.6 million merger of Centre Video Inc., State College, Pa., into Tele-Communications Inc., the Denver-based nationwide group cable owner. Centre Video owns a group of cable firms in and around Pittsburgh. The merger resulted in giving Tele-Communications a base of 140,000 subscribers.

Meanwhile, broadcasters maintain a steady drumbeat to persuade the FCC, and the Congress, that cable TV is a direct threat to over-the-air TV. During the year, the National Association of Broadcasters' Free Television News Bureau, and its Future of Broadcasting committee, have publicized the broadcaster viewpoint through news releases, speeches at industry and public meetings, and other forms of publicity.

Perhaps the most effective industry move has been the establishment by the NAB of a political action committee. Organized on a state and regional basis, this lobbying organization has as its principal purpose seeing to it that congressmen and senators know and understand the broadcaster viewpoint on CATV. Campaigning alongside the NAB in the fight against cable TV has been the Association of Maximum Service Telecasters, a group of ranking telecasters throughout the nation.

The one move to compromise the differences between broadcasters and cable operators was taken in 1969 when the staffs of NAB and the National Cable Television Association hammered out a tentative agreement. This foundered, however, when the NAB board unequivocally rejected the terms. That plan would have permitted cable systems to carry up to seven TV stations in return for compulsory licensing in a copyright bill. In return, cable systems would have been required to recognize the exclusivity provisions in TV station contracts with program suppliers. Cable systems also would have been restricted to program origination on a single channel, for which they could sell advertising. And, most significantly, the CATV industry would have agreed not to interconnect their systems to form a network.

Broadcasters seek to persuade Congress to take up the CATV question, especially where it looks as if the FCC may be not stringent enough in its final regulations on cable CATV. When the FCC begins to provide an inkling of how it plans to decide the cable TV question, sometime in 1971, broadcasters will decide whether to push even harder to get Congress to take the question away from the commission and to decide the results itself.

Congress, of course, is no novice on CATV. As far back as 1960, the Senate, by a bare one-vote margin, refused to enact legislation that would have placed CATV under the regulatory umbrella of the FCC. That is academic now since the commission itself assumed that authority in 1966. But even in 1967, the House of Representatives tangled with CATV when it deliberated on the revision of the Copyright Act of 1909. CATV from its start has never paid broadcasters for the use of their programs. This course was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1968, which held that cable TV did not "perform" under the provisions of the existing copyright law. The House proposed to spell out what CATV could and could not do in exchange for compulsory licensing for cable TV, which would have also set fixed royalty payments. So much objection occurred, from broadcasters and copyright owners as well as from other congressmen, who felt that some of the provisions were regulatory in nature and belonged under the Commerce Committee, that the cable TV section was stricken from the bill.

For the last two years, a Senate committee has struggled with CATV and copyright. A special unit of the Senate Judiciary Committee, under Senator John McClellan (D-Ark.), evolved a formula that to date has not been brought to the floor for a vote. The McClellan-backed proposal would impose a compulsory license on CATV, with quarterly royalties ranging from 1% on the first $40,000 of revenues up to 5% on revenues of $160,000 or more. In exchange, cable systems in the first 50 markets would be permitted to carry up to three network, two independents and one educational TV signals. In other markets, this limit would be the same, but with only one independent permitted to be brought into a cable community. Generally, the cable industry favored this approach. When, and if, the 92nd Congress will attack this problem is a question. Part of the FCC's plan is to draw up a model for copyright payments and then to go to the Congress for legislation.

Throughout the history of CATV, there have been broadcasters in the field. It is estimated that over 35% of all systems are affiliated with broadcasters in ownership. Many broadcasters long have felt that CATV is properly an extension of broadcasting, although the FCC proposes to ban such cross-ownership in the same markets.

Most recently, many broadcasters have been realigning their positions. But in two significant cases, major broadcasters are not selling off their cable holdings; they're quitting broadcasting. Obviously, it is not only the cable-TV problem that is forcing this; the commission has for some time been deliberating a one-to-a-customer policy that would impose stronger limitations on broadcast ownership of stations as well as CATV.

In two principal actions, Time Inc. agreed to sell its broadcast stations to McGraw-Hill Publishing Co. in an $80 million deal, and Triangle Publications is selling its TV and radio holdings to Capital Cities Broadcasting Corp. for $110 million.

But, it is significantly noted, both are holding on to their cable TV properties.

The 'Broadcasting' Guide to Spot Planning

The broadcast planning process, as practiced by national advertisers, consists of four steps: (1) determining the advertising value of local markets; (2) calculating the delivery of national media in these local markets; (3) locating the markets where national advertising weight is insufficient; (4) estimating the cost of the spot advertising required to bring "underweight" local markets into proper balance with their advertising value.

The following data, augmented by specific brand information, is all the spot planner needs to complete this process. The sources, as noted in the separate tables, are the American Research Bureau, Beltsville, Md.; the A. C. Nielsen Co., Chicago, and The Katz Agency, station representative, New York. The material has been prepared for publication by Carl Ally Inc., New York. In sequence, here are the sections of this guide:

1. The Television Markets. These are markets as defined by ARB as areas of dominant influence (ADI), shown in alphabetical order. Listings contain individual county television-home counts, population data for the market, and capsule listings of the stations serving each market. See also Map of The Television Markets on pages 54-55.

2. The Markets Ranked by Size. These show the distribution of TV homes and population by television market (ADI). Page 44.

3. Product Usage in TV Markets. These figures isolate for individual markets the consumption of 11 major product categories and supermarket sales. These are for use in assigning "advertising value" to each market. Page 47.

4. How TV Network Delivery Varies by Market. Local-market audiences reached by each network during prime time. This data is presented to show markets where TV network delivery is low and requires spot support. Page 49.

5. TV Markets by Nielsen Territory. A size ranking of markets within Nielsen Retail Index territory. For use in determining the number of spot markets needed to obtain a given level of territory coverage. Page 52.

6. TV Markets Matched with Sales Areas. The distribution of each TV market's households by Nielsen Retail Index county-size categories. For use in determining the weight delivered to a given county-size classification by a list of spot markets. Page 56.

The Television Markets

Here, listed alphabetically, are the 207 ADI TV markets which constitute the United States. According to ARB's formula, each county in the U.S. is exclusively assigned to a single market, based upon dominant coverage of the county by the stations originating in the market. Market data shows the stations, their cities of license, channel numbers and network affiliation. (Networks in parenthesis indicate secondary affiliations). Also shown are the counties composing the market and their television household count. Population data included is total for the market.

Television billings 1948-1969

Figures for the years 1949 through 1967 are net time sales by stations and networks after all frequency and promotional discounts but before deduction of commissions to agencies and representatives. Figures for 1968 and 1969 were computed under a new formula and represent total amounts paid by advertisers for the use of broadcast facilities. They include commissions paid to advertising agencies and representatives and payments for broadcast time and programs, materials, facilities and services supplied by broadcast stations and networks in connection with the sale of time.

Radio-TV Station Employment

In this table, groupings of full-time staffs of radio and television stations have been made. Percentages of the total reporting stations employing a given number of people are shown. For example, in the United States, 2.5% of all reporting television stations and 12.7% of all reporting AM radio stations employ full-time staffs of from one to five persons.

Figures in parentheses are cumulative to a given point on the chart. For example, in the U.S., 6.9% of reporting television stations and 52.5% of reporting AM radio stations employ full-time staffs of 10 or less persons. U.S. figures are derived from totals of 2,502 AM stations, 463 FM stations and 321 television stations; Canadian figures are from 83 AM and FM's, and 8 TV's.

Product Usage in TV Markets

Spot planning takes into account the varying demand for various products in different markets. The table below presents local-market product usage rates as a ratio to the national average of that product's usage. The resulting number pinpoints the markets that offer the greatest per-household opportunity for sale of specific products.

For example, the New York index is 115 for instant coffee. That indicates that the average New York household uses 15% more of those products than the national average.

These indices provide a means of weighting individual markets when allocating spot dollars. If on a straight population basis New York would receive 10% of an instant coffee's total advertising weight, the index of 115 would boost New York's share to 15% more advertising weight than population alone would indicate.

The following table provides product-usage indexes for 12 categories of products and supermarket expenditures in 100 television markets ranked in descending order of size. Because of sample-size requirements the usage data is available only for markets with a reported metro area. But the data relates specifically to American Research Bureau Areas of Dominant Influence and was tabulated from the February-March 1970 sweep.

How Network Delivery Varies by Market

Which markets need spot support, and how much money should be spent, by market, are questions of vital concern to both the national advertiser and the local station. This table provides the audience data critical to these decisions—the local-market performance of network TV average programs.

National advertisers use spot television to increase network advertising weight in specific markets to achieve a predetermined level. These market goals are derived from the advertising budget and the market's share of the brand's projected sales. Thus, a spot schedule is usually indicated where a market has an unusually high brand-sales potential, or where the network weight delivered for the brand is below the national average used in planning, or both.

The first factor, market brand potential, varies by product and cannot be generalized. The second factor, local-market network audiences, must be generalized because planning is based upon next season's anticipated network performance.

The prevalence of network "package" buys, which tend to deliver average audience levels, supports average data.

The following tabulation shows the American Research Bureau's Areas of Dominant Influence (ADI) in terms of percent of the total number of U.S. TV households. Also given, in like percentage terms, are the network audiences in each ADI market during daytime and prime-time hours. It is this market audience figure, when compared to the market's share of population, that indicates whether the network commitment will perform above or below the national plan average in that market. For example, the New York market contains 9.88% of total U.S. TV households. The New York audience attracted by the average ABC daytime program is 8.87% of the total national audience the average ABC daytime program attracts. This is the starting point for creating the spot-market list and allocating spot dollars.

Matching Markets and Sales Territories

Nielsen Retail Index territory groupings are another standard way of reporting sales data. The following table ranks TV markets within each Nielsen territory. This provides a yardstick for determining the number of spot markets needed to achieve a given coverage of a territory. For example, if the national media are not delivering sufficient advertising weight in New England, the planner will find that three TV markets (Boston, Hartford and Providence) contain more than 80% of the New England territory households. Or, he can use the table to get a better idea of how and what TV markets are needed to cover all of New England. Data is from the Nielsen Station Index, September 1970.

The Television Markets

This map shows the 207 television markets as defined by the American Research Bureau's Areas of Dominant Influence and the 25 other markets where stations are in operation but where home counties are assigned to another market under the ADI allocation.

In the ADI concept each county in the U.S. is assigned exclusively to a television market. Each ADI contains all the counties in which the home-market stations receive a preponderance of viewing. Where a county is divided by ARB into more than one sampling unit, each unit is analyzed, for ADI purposes, as if it were a county and is assigned to an ADI.

There is one exception to that general rule. A metro county or the home county of a station having no metro rating or the home county of a satellite station is not assigned to the ADI of another market unless the average of the percentages of viewing hours of the stations in the other market is at least 10% greater than the sum of the percentages of viewing hours of the station in the metro or home county under consideration.

Key to symbols: A double-headed arrow indicates a county that is noncontiguous to the ADI of which it is a part. A broken line around all or part of a county identifies one of the 25 market areas consisting of station home counties assigned to the ADI of another market.

TV Markets Matched with Sales Areas

Advertiser sales data is reported by sales district, region and county size. Media planning uses the TV market as its basic unit. Often these different pieces do not fit together well. The table below deals with the problem of reconciling county-size reporting with television-market definitions.

Counties are placed in different categories according to complicated formulas that take into account population, contiguity, density of population and other factors. The "A" counties are the 26 major metropolitan areas; "B" counties contain the next largest group of cities; "C" counties contain the smaller towns; "D" counties are largely rural.

County-size sales data shows where a brand has its greatest strength, whether it is a big-city, urban, or rural brand. Since geographic flexibility is one of the strengths of spot broadcasting, county-size statistics are important inputs for spot planning. For example, if Brand X has an above-average A-market sales potential (and national media typically under-deliver in these bigger markets) major-market spot might be recommended to supplement the national effort. Here is where the problem of "fit" occurs.

Market definitions are television markets (DMA's or Designated Market Areas), and each market comprises counties that fall into different county-size groupings. A case in point: The top-20 DMA's are all A-county markets. Yet more than 20% of their populations live in non-A counties. So the media planner using spot to increase A-county impression-weight cannot assume that the spot dollars spent in A markets are all contributing to this goal. The following tabulations from A. C. Nielsen Co. show the distribution of DMA television households by county size for each DMA market and in incremental groups of 10 markets.

TV Market Costs Per Area Gross Rating Point

For advertisers that use gross rating points as the measurement of spot-TV media weight, a useful estimating short cut is the cost-per-rating-point guide. These figures permit the rapid calculation of the budget required to buy any number of gross rating points in market lists of varying depth.

For example, Katz estimates the cost of one early-news ADI rating point in the top-10 markets at $1,005. A weekly 50-GRP schedule would cost $50,250 ($1,005 x 50) per week for as many weeks as scheduled. The costs reported below are planning averages and tend to be high. They should provide adequate margin for estimating budgeting in 1971.

These figures are from The Katz Agency's 1970 "Spot Television Cost Summary." Costs are based on five per week, pre-emptible rates for the second most expensive station in each market. This guide is based on American Research Bureau ADI ratings, as reported in ARB's 1969 "Television Market Analysis."

Radio Budget Estimator

The following tables, provided by The Katz Agency, New York, are designed for estimating spot-radio costs. Katz emphasizes they are not intended to take the place of station rate cards. All costs are based on rates published by Standard Rate and Data Service for December 1969. Costs were computed to the nearest cent, but final figures were rounded to the nearest dollar. In AM-FM combinations, AM-only rates were used where available; AM-FM rates were used where no AM-only rates were available. Lowest applicable costs were used. The following daypart definitions apply: morning traffic, 6-10 a.m.; daytime, 10 a.m.-3 p.m.; afternoon traffic, 3-7 p.m.; evening, 7 p.m.-midnight. Where more than one rate level was available within any daypart, the rate applicable to the most time within the daypart was used.

The Radio and Television Audiences

Radio and television were in more U.S. homes than ever before as 1971 approached.

■ Television.—A total of 60.1 million homes, or 95.5% of all U.S. homes (excluding Alaska and Hawaii), were TV-equipped as of September 1970, according to the A. C. Nielsen Co. The American Research Bureau estimated the total would be 60,775,000 homes (excluding Alaska) as of January 1971.

■ Color TV.—Homes equipped with color TV sets totaled 26.2 million, or 43.2% of all TV homes, as of Oct. 1, 1970, according to estimates by NBC.

■ Radio.—The Radio Advertising Bureau estimated that

62 million U.S. homes, or about 98.6%, were radio-equipped in 1970.

■ Radio Sets.—The number of working-order radio sets in the U.S. totaled 320.7 million in 1970, according to estimates by the Radio Advertising Bureau. RAB estimated that 230.2 million of these were home and personal radio sets and 90.5 million were out-of-home receivers. The total represented a 5.7% gain over the 303.4 million estimated for 1969.

■ Viewing and Listening.—The extent to which radio and television sets were used is indicated in numerous ways in the tables that follow. The television figures were furnished by the Nielsen company and its Nielsen Television Index (NTI). The radio data came from RAB, NBC and other sources as noted.

Cumulative Audiences: Radio and TV

Cumulative reach of radio is compared with that of television in the following figures from NBC Radio's 1965 Cumulative Radio Audience Method (CRAM) study, made public in 1966. Although the study was conducted primarily to test new research methodology, NBC said it considered these estimates "approximate" but "conservative" benchmarks.

Number (and %) of Different U.S. Adults Reached (18 Years of Age and Over)

	In One Day	In Seven Days
Radio.....	92,100,000 (75.1%)	111,000,000 (90.5%)
Television*.....	80,900,000 (65.9%)	106,500,000 (86.8%)

* TV percentages based on a special Nielsen Television Index tabulation covering in-home viewing only, adjusted to reflect (1) all U.S. individuals 18 years of age and over from both TV and non-TV households, and (2) April TV set usage patterns. NBC's CRAM report said this radio-TV comparison "does not imply that television and radio are equal in impact or effectiveness" but "does suggest that radio's broad reach makes the medium an ideal choice for backing up television advertising."

Minutes of TV Viewing and Radio Listening by TV Viewers

Amount of time that adult viewers (over 18 years of age) spend daily with the broadcast media, by day part and for the day as a whole, is shown in the following tables. In each case the viewers are classified in five groups according to how much time they spend with TV, from the 20% who watch most (at top) in descending order to the 20% who watch least (bottom). TV dominates 6 p.m. to midnight period, but radio has an edge in all other day parts, with the biggest advantage among lighter viewing groups. Data, the most recent available in this form, was prepared for Radio Advertising Bureau by R. H. Bruskin Associates, independent research firm, based on nationwide interviewing conducted in July 1964.

HOUR-BY-HOUR variations in television and radio audience sizes are shown in these tables. The TV figures, from Nielsen's NTI data for March-April 1970, show the television audience in terms of percentage of homes tuned in per average minute of each hour, Monday through Sunday. The radio figures, compiled for RAB by Sindlinger & Co. in a 1964 study, represent the percentage of all adults who listen to radio, also hour by hour.

Extent of Broadcast Editorializing

A nationwide survey for the BROADCASTING Yearbook indicates that nearly 50% of AM and TV stations are now editorializing at least occasionally, but that only about 35% of FM's are doing so. The editorializing survey data was obtained from the Yearbook questionnaire sent to all radio and TV stations. Here are the results:

How To Get In On A Great Performance.

On the road

If you're going to take your show on the road, you'll get a great performance from the "touring pros"—the crews and mobile-unit facilities of the Hughes Television Network. We've logged more hours on location than anyone else in the business. And you know, great performance comes from experience.

In sports

When it comes to performance in the field of sports, we outscore everyone. The Hughes Sports Network telecasts more hours of sports programming than anyone in the industry. As a matter of fact, we created the concept of the tailored, regional network to carry many of these events. That's why more stations and sponsors are coming to Hughes each year for real performance at reasonable cost.

In prime time

Now it's possible for an advertiser to give a performance in prime time on a national network without going to Tom, Dick or Harry. We've done it for people like Xerox, Faberge and Alcoa with prime time entertainment and documentary specials by giving them their own networks. And stations seem to like the alternative that this kind of network participation has to offer.

Both sides of KOIN come up on top in Portland

Choosing the channel that more people watch doesn't have to be a toss-up. Not in the Portland market area. Not when KOIN-TV is the favorite news and entertainment station.

KOIN-TV reaches more TV homes than any other Portland station. KOIN-TV's net weekly circulation is 558,750—60,691 more than the second best circulation. And in that true measure of viewer loyalty, "average daily circulation," KOIN-TV leads station Number Two by 58,011 homes.

Whatever audience is your target, you'll find more customers watching KOIN-TV. Check the ratings yourself. Then cash in with KOIN.

Name another business magazine that's quoted oftener than we are.

Come up and look at our scrapbooks some time. Or better yet, come up and help us paste clippings. We fall behind. It's hard to keep up when they're coming from points as far-flung as the "Chicago Tribune" and "Los Angeles Times," The New York Times" and "The Birmingham News," "The Wichita Sunday Eagle and Beacon" and the "Battle Creek Enquirer and News"—to drop a few names from a page picked at random in our current scrapbook.

We regard these clippings as endorsements of our editorial quality. And so may you, if you're an advertiser looking for an environment that will add importance to your message.

Take our word for it. Just as journalists everywhere take our word for what is going on in your business.

Houston is

...the market of tomorrow. Diversified building programs and far-reaching plans have made Houston the forerunner in the race to face the future.

Houston is...balanced growth and expansion. While the booming suburban areas spread out, the downtown area reaches up...providing "total communities," realistic transportation and a planned environment.

And while investment capital pours in...so do people...at the rate of a 38% increase in population in the last decade.

Part of the developing Houston is:

- ALLEN CENTER, Trammell Crow and Metropolitan Life's 21-acre, billion-dollar urban project.
- GREENWAY PLAZA, 127 suburban acres blossoming with office buildings, hotels and apartments.
- HOUSTON CENTER, Texas Eastern's billion-dollar plus redevelopment of 32 downtown blocks.
- PLAZA DEL ORO, Shell's 526-acre development near the Astrodome complex.
- ONE SHELL PLAZA, a 50-story headquarters tower...and across the street, its rising sister building, TWO SHELL PLAZA.
- THE GALLERIA, the new hub of Houston's high-fashion shopping area, with three tiers of 100 retail stores and restaurants surrounding an over-sized ice-skating rink.
- THE ASTRODOME, world's largest indoor arena and adjacent convention facility.

Houston is...a many-faceted market strong enough to attract the world headquarters of international firms...as well as millions of tourist dollars annually.

Houston is...facing tomorrow...today.

TV Allocations, State, City

Note: UHF and VHF TV allocations have been made by the FCC to the following cities. A plus or minus after a channel indicates that a station occupying the channel must operate with its carrier frequencies offset 10 kilocycles above or below, respectively, the normal carrier frequencies. The offset indicators are not shown for UHF assignments, which were the subject of a rulemaking adopted June 4, 1965. The designators were to be added in a later order, but had not been published by time the Yearbook went to press. Meanwhile, the appropriate designators are shown on construction permits and licenses issued for UHF stations. Asterisks (*) indicate channels reserved for noncommercial use. 1) Following the decision in Doc 18261 (amendment of rules regarding geographic reallocation of channels 14-20 to land mobile radio in the 25 largest urbanized areas of the U.S.) channels so indicated will not be available for use until further action by the FCC. 2) This channel is not available for Elgin, Ill., unless FCC determines it is not needed at Joliet, Ill. 3) This channel is not available for Asbury Park, N.J., unless FCC determines it is not needed at New Brunswick, N.J.

YOU LEARN A LOT IN 44 YEARS

Storer Broadcasting has learned a few things over the years. We hope we never forget them.

We've learned that the most important element in a station's success is a responsive, continually building audience with confidence in a broadcaster's integrity and credibility. We've learned that the best way to develop such audiences is to become sincerely involved in the communities our stations serve—in the problems, the aspirations, the undertakings, the achievements, even the failures, when the objectives are worthwhile.

All this is not entirely out of charity. There's a tangible reason, too. The more effective we are in our communities, the more effective we are for our advertisers, the more effective we are for ourselves. Our "most important product" is our audience and community reputation. We've worked at it for 44 years and plan to continue working at it as good neighbors, involved friends and effective broadcasters. That way everybody wins.
