THE YEAR IN REVIEW

BY WILLIAM J. QUIGLEY

The home is becoming a vast digital communication and entertainment network. Music, sound, voice, video, data and internet access are becoming interconnected by an increasing number of systems and devices. Not surprisingly, individuals want to duplicate this access outside the home and have their networks portable. Thanks to digital technologies, combinations of formerly unrelated products are becoming common. Cellphone makers provide a good example. Their products have become indispensable to anyone under thirty by adding cameras, music players, email and video access. How many teenagers use a watch to tell time when their cellphones do that? Phone companies want to deliver television and video. Cable companies want to offer phone service. Staid and somber utility companies want to deliver entertainment. Google, Yahoo and Microsoft all want to provide data and video search services and then profit from the advertisements sold. Movie theatres now generate a significant share of their revenue from on-screen advertising.

The most interesting thing in media this year is to see how firms are starting to organize their people and work flow to position themselves for opportunity and profit that they hope will be generated by their particular vision of the future. The ongoing battle among traditional media companies and those new firms that are starting to define themselves that way, is who will construct, operate and connect those distribution channels. Cable, satellite, telephone, TV, high-speed Internet access, wireless broadband and digital television providers are all vying for position and control of the content, delivery systems, search and storage.

This presents an ongoing dilemma for all media companies. In the past, there were fairly narrow and well defined distribution channels like broadcast TV and theatrical motion pictures that required a huge audience and for the most part were advertiser supported. By their nature, the content and programming tends to be aimed at a mass audience which accepts what is delivered, passively. Now, we seem to be at the headwaters of significant change. All of our internet experience is all about individual choices. We decide what information we need and what content we want to see or what music we want to hear and when. Everything is personalized. Firms will have to learn how to balance the ability to mass market with the ability to target a market of one. As always, companies that correctly anticipate the needs and wants of customers will be the winners.

There were several changes in major media companies during the year. Sumner Redstone unwound Viacom and split the company into two parts, ostensibly to maximize shareholder value. Michael Eisner retired from Disney, left the Board and severed all relationships with the company he was instrumental in reviving. A major thorn in Eisner's side, the Weinsteins, left Disney and the company named after their parents, and started a new one. Aside from Rupert Murdoch keeping a wary eye on John Malone, succession at Fox became an issue again as Murdoch's son and heir apparent, Lachlan, resigned. Steve Case, co-founder of AOL and the architect of the disastrous AOL-Time Warner merger resigned in late October.

BROADCAST

The face of network news will never be the same. 2005 witnessed the death of Peter Jennings and the departure of anchors Dan Rather from CBS, Tom Brokaw from NBC and Ted Koppel from ABC. These men held enormous sway over their networks and our culture for many decades.

Never before has the race for ratings and that key 18-49 demographic advertisers crave been so tight. Nowadays, a single hit show can impact the standings, transforming a has-been network into a winner. Consider the sea change in the last year: perennial champion NBC has declined precipitously, ABC unexpectedly has several of the above-mentioned hits, CBS has finally found a younger audience and Fox has become a powerhouse. The playing field has leveled. The jockeying for Thursday night primacy by all the networks is symptomatic of the money at stake. Thursday night is the biggest night for television advertising because it is the last big TV night before the weekend, which is critical to those advertisers like movie studios, restaurants and car companies that need to do big weekend business. Hence the scramble for appropriate programming. The broadcast business model requires huge audiences to sustain those advertisers.

In comparison to last year, when most of the programming seemed to be dominated by reality shows or procedural crime dramas, 2005 has been a breath of fresh air. ABC has had great success with quality dramas this year. Sitcoms, which looked dead six months ago, have made a strong comeback. NBC and UPN have comedy hits. Fox has 12 comedies on its schedule and all the networks seem to be experimenting with new voices and new concepts. Possibly due to the success of "Lost" last year, every network has at least one science fiction offering. In a 500 channel universe there is more competition for fewer eyeballs and programmers have a hard time trying to define and address their targets. Interestingly, this seems to be stimulating risk taking and delivering more creative content.

Figuratively, ABC spent 2005 "Dancing With the Stars," which also was a smash hit show for them during the summer. In a few short years, this network has transformed itself from a beleaguered also-ran into the leader in quality television dramas with shows such as "Desperate Housewives," "Lost," "Grey's Anatomy," "Boston Legal" and "Commander-in-Chief." Shows like "Extreme Makeover: Home Edition," "According to Jim" and "America's Funniest Home Video" continued to do well. New shows such as "Invasion" also generated interest and an audience. Disappointments were "Night Stalker" and "Freddie." "Monday Night Football" continues to be strong in its last season and the network will be airing Super Bowl XL in 2006. It is interesting to note that ABC has done a terrific job in development in the last few years and they have done it without a derivative procedural crime drama. It really has been a terrific year for ABC and with continued improvement, it is possible that ABC could finish first in 2005-2006.

Conversely, CBS remains at the top of the ratings in part due to the success of their procedural drama hits: "CSI," its spinoffs; "CSI: NY" and "CSI: Miami," "Without a Trace" and "NCIS," which has steadily built its audience among viewers aged 18 to 49 and is emblematic of the network's new prowess in attracting young viewers. Although entertainment head, Nina Tassler, has been criticized for overdoing it on these types of shows, it is clear that she is just delivering what a sizeable audience wants. There was a lot of concern about replacing the long running hit, "Everybody Loves Raymond," but the success of "Two and a Half Men" made that transition painless. Reality series "Survivor: Guatemala" and "Amazing Race" continue to perform and the new comedies, "How I Met Your Mother" and "Out of Practice" were strong. CBS replaced News president, Andrew Heyward, with Sean McManus, president of CBS Sports in November, about a year after the fallout from the discredited "60 Minutes" report challenging George Bush's military service. That scandal led to the departure of Dan Rather, a producer and three senior news executives.

Last year NBC's prime-time audience in the important 18-49 demographic decreased by 11% which plunged it from No. 1 to No. 4 in the season ranking and culminated in a disastrous "upfront" revenue decline in May 2005 of many hundreds of millions of dollars. After nearly ten years of "Must See TV" on top, the network started the fall season in an unaccustomed place; at the bottom looking up at its competitors. NBC Entertainment President, Kevin Reilly, was very conservative with the fall schedule, apparently trying to stabilize a weakening situation and may have made too big a bet on "The Apprentice" franchise. When NBC moved "The West Wing" to Sunday nights, competing with "Cold Case" and "Extreme Makeover," the series suffered a 30% decline in viewers. "The Apprentice: Martha Stewart" and "E-Ring" have been major disappointments but "My Name is Earl" shows promise. On a positive note, the network will broadcast the Winter Olympics and start airing NFL games on Sunday night in 2006.

Fox has a unique scheduling challenge each year as the baseball playoffs preempt much of October's programming. Fox Entertainment President, Peter Liguori, has turned that difficulty into a plus by premiering several shows such as "Prison Break," earlier than any of the other networks' fall launches, hoping to get them established before the October hiatus. Last season's surprise hit, "House" and "Family Guy" helped Fox's schedule but "Reunion" and "Kitchen Confidential" did not do so well. Unfortunately, "Arrested Development" remains the critical darling that can't seem to attract a substantial audience. "The OC" was disappointing and the White Sox's four game sweep of the World Series could not compare with the Red Sox-Yankees barnburner last year. In any event, the return of "American Idol" and "24" in January 2006 insures a strong surge in the ratings, much as they propelled Fox to Number 1 among adults 18-49 for the first time ever last year.

The WB launched its four new shows; "Just Legal," "Related," "Supernatural" and "Twins" using returning shows; "7th Heaven," "Gilmore Girls," "One Tree Hill" and "What I Like About You" respectively, as lead-ins. Network president, David Janollari, also took a fair amount of risk and programmed "Smallville" and "Everwood" on Thursday nights, where it faced competition from CBS' "Survivor" and "CSI: Crime Scene Investigation" juggernaut, other proven series and UPN's hit, "Everybody Hates Chris." It is not often that a show in its fourth season benefits from a move to a new night, but that is exactly what has happened with "Smallville."

UPN has consistently and considerably upgraded the quality of its programming and talent in the last few years under the guidance of Dawn Ostroff, the network president. Chris Rock's "Everybody Hates Chris" is a certified hit that UPN had so much confidence in that they put it against NBC's "Joey" on Thursday night and moved "Smackdown" to Friday night. With "America's Top Model" and the well reviewed "Veronica Mars" this Viacom-owned network has made immense strides.

CABLE

While satellite still continues to lead both digital and analog cable in overall customer satisfaction, that gap has narrowed considerably and is likely to be eliminated in the future because of digital cable's main advantages: high-speed Internet access, video-on-demand (VOD) and the ability to receive and record high definition (HD) programs at very little cost. Obviously, another driver of customer satisfaction is number of channels and variety of interesting programming. Digital cable is clearly competitive with satellite in that regard. An interesting fact is that although customers appreciate a large number of channels, they typically watch less than 15% of those available on a weekly basis. This will surely continue the pricing debate about whether consumers should be forced to pay for packages of programming they don't want or be able to purchase a la carte. It becomes even more of an issue if VOD, DVRs and a coming-soon search engine for shows on cable, change consumer behavior and subscribers stop-channel surfing or using program guides and just watch what they want, anytime they want to watch it.

Although cable did even better than last year and trumped the broadcast networks with a 60% share of the prime time audience over the summer, there are potential clouds on the horizon. There is evidence that many of the major cable programmers are suffering the same kind of audience erosion that has been a fact of life for the broadcast networks for the last 25 years. More choice and niche targeting among smaller cable channels nibble at the share of the big channels, exactly the same way the older cable networks ate the share of the broadcast networks. This means that there will have to be substantial investment in content by any cable network that wants to grow or protect its share.

This could also explain the number of channels that have changed their identities over the last several years. MTV and VH1, which came to life exclusively on music videos, now favor reality shows. The changes at AMC, with their tremendous expansion of the definition of "classic" movies, were so radical that they were sued successfully by Time Warner Cable, primarily to protect TNT and TBS programming. E! has expanded way beyond Hollywood and into popular culture for content and formerly high-brow A&E and Bravo feature shows like "Growing Up Gotti." Discovery and TLC are barely recognizable these days. Although HBO is still a 600 pound gorilla, HBO's average prime time audience is down almost 40% from last year when "The Sopranos" and "Sex and the City" were running new episodes. However, it is very interesting to note that almost 20% of HBO's revenue now comes from DVD sales.

Perhaps because of the need to attract attention, cable has become a leading source of dramatic series, with FX, TNT and USA creating one successful show after another. Many other channels have created some edgy, daring fare. FX has three successful dramas in "The Shield," "Nip/Tuck" and "Rescue Me." USA has "Monk," "The 4400" and "The Dead Zone." Lifetime aired the miniseries, "Human Trafficking" and MTV's Networks service for gay and lesbian audiences aired "Transgeneration," a documentary about college students undergoing sex changes. Cable has a distinct advantage over broadcast in that it can create and play R-rated content.

SATELLITE

The number of households subscribing to satellite TV service increased dramatically over the past year, at the expense of cable. According to a study by J.D. Powers and Associates, this year 27% of U.S. households subscribe to satellite service, up from 19 percent in 2004 and 12 percent in 2000. Sixty percent of households subscribe to cable, down from 62% in 2004 and 66% in 2000.

However, this growth for both EchoStar Communications and DirecTV Group Inc. has come at a price; subscriber-acquisition cost rose and the rate of customer growth slowed during 2005. For EchoStar, these costs climbed 16% and net new customers were down more than 30% from 2004. Numbers for DirecTV Group are similar. Total revenue is still growing but is getting tougher, due to increased competition from cable television, telephone companies and each other. In fact, DirecTV's growth this year was the slowest in the last seven years and EchoStar's growth was the slowest in the last three years. Perhaps the biggest disadvantage that the satellite companies have is that they cannot currently bundle video, phone and data services, as the cable and telcos do.

The satellite providers are addressing these by adding their own bells and whistles. EchoStar announced a portable media player that can display TV programs, movies, play music or store photographs. DirecTV "Superfan" subscribers have a channel where they can watch eight football games simultaneously on one screen. DirecTV now offers local channels in 130 markets and the Dish Networks serves 160 markets. By early next year, DirecTV and EchoStar will switch to a new compression format, MPEG-4, so that more high-definition channels can be transmitted.

Two highly publicized strategic alliances unravelled during 2005: EchoStar's partnership with phone company SBC Communications and DirecTV's decision to replace TiVo's digital video recorders with their own product. Obviously, there is a lot of transition in the marketplace as allies start to be viewed as competitors and competitors viewed as potential partners.

DVD & HOME VIDEO

After years of extraordinary growth, DVDs have replaced videotapes as the medium of choice for prerecorded video. However, it is becoming clear that the DVD market is beginning to show its age and has entered its "mature" phase. In 2002 sales and rentals grew at 70%, in 2003, 40%, in 2004, 28% and 10% in 2005. Some predict that 2006's growth rate could decline to 4%. While it was booming, this growth masked the decline in the VHS business, created billions of dollars in incremental revenue for the studios and justified ever increasing production and marketing costs. The extent to which this changed in 2005-was evident when DreamWorks Animation roiled Wall Street after its second quarter by announcing a loss and said it expected lower earnings in 2005, because of disappointing sales of "Shrek 2" on DVD. At the time, Jeffrey Katzenberg said he did not know whether it reflected a short term retail issue or a decrease in demand.

With nearly 70% of American households equipped with DVD players, it is no surprise that home entertainment's growth is slowing. What took some in the press and on Wall Street by surprise was the extent of the overhang of unsold DVDs that are returned by retailers, as well as the slackening in demand. However, even though the market is maturing, it is still a huge revenue generator because the entire pie has become so large. Marketers are continuing to try to differentiate their product by adding value and bonus features to the disks, but the best thing the industry could do about slowing sales is to agree on a new high definition format. Unfortunately, Blu-ray and HD-DVD have divided the industry into two equal sized camps. There is enough evidence from the VHS and Beta wars to know that consumers will not invest in the upgraded technology in substantial numbers until there is consensus on what the "winning" format will be.

Wal-Mart and Best Buy have become the top sellers of DVDs and control almost 50% of the sell-through market. Interestingly, the studios are starting to market DVDs in a fashion similar to the theatrical release. Just a few years ago ad dollars were spent in the first few weeks after the titles were available in stores. These days, the big marketing dollars are spent prior to the DVD release date, in an attempt to get a huge opening weekend, just like the theatrical release.

Netflix, Inc.'s business model has proven to be a winner, at least in the short run, and they will have over 4 million subscribers by the end of 2005. In a major turnaround, Wal-Mart gave up its competing subscription business to NetFlix. Meanwhile, Blockbuster has taken a tremendous revenue hit by being forced to abandon late fees and has been closing money losing stores. They also delayed its announced goal of 2 million subscribers to sometime in 2006.

Just as VHS begot DVD and DVD begot high-definition DVD, there will come a time when DVDs give way to online delivery of movies. The really interesting thing in the future will be whether the broadband pipeline that carries voice, internet, video or who knows what else is controlled by the cable, phone and satellite companies or by companies like Yahoo, TiVo, Apple, Microsoft or other entities that will offer content through the internet. Will the question be determined by whether one uses a remote control or a keyboard to access product? As always, it will be the customers who ultimately decide.
