'A Service to Indie Stations' Is Radio's True Role Today

By ROBERT F.
HURLEIGH
President
Mutual Broadcasting System

ON June 2, 1957, the Mutual Broadcasting System made a clean break with traditional network programming. Starting that day, after taking a long, hard look at the changing economics and new requirements of advertisers, we became "a service to independent stations"—a program service to our more than 500 affiliates on a continuous, 18-hour a day basis, seven days a week—a program service with a greater emphasis on news, special events, and features of various nature.

That this new programming concept has succeeded is demonstrated by the clearances we receive from affiliated stations for advertisers, which in turn have resulted in a profit to the network for the first time in 10 years.

Today, there are continuing numerous indications that radio advertising is becoming healthier. We are now far beyond the stage when advertisers would select a program just because they liked it themselves. Today, astute sponsors are choosing programs because they reach, please, and render a service to a specific audience representing a customer market, and thereby provide the highest possible sales returns per dollar expended.

Research continues as an important factor in helping radio advertising to produce greater sales response, although we have become increasingly aware that radio needs a more effective, universal, impartial standard of measurement of potential audiences of stations and networks.

With 183 million radio sets in use in 1962, and almost 30 million sold every year, four out of five of which are self-powered, or car radios, it is obvious that more adequate listening measurements should be developed to give advertisers a true picture of radio's size.

I would like to propose that the RAB—the Radio Advertising Bureau—consider the possibility of meeting with the proper people in the major rating services in an attempt to clarify why there are differences and where these differences occur. I suggest RAB because it is a "radio only" organization and has accomplished much in the cause of radio. If we could have a group of station owners appointed to meet with the executives of the rating services on an informational basis—to be able to present to the radio industry a report which could be an advisor on the use of the different surveys—much would be accomplished.

Reviewing radio's growth in 1962—especially Mutual's—we become more aware of the tremendous effect of its prevalence in American life today. We knew that a new formula for network programming was needed—its format had to change since television became the glamor medium. We concluded that radio network's true role today is as a service organization, bringing to its affiliates news, discussion, commentary, public affairs and special events programming which individual stations cannot develop simply because they do not have the resources and facilities with which to do so.

We take it as a compliment to our foresight that our competitors have followed our lead in this news concept of cross-country broadcasting.

Closing the 'Measuring Gap' To Reflect Radio's True Growth

By
WILLIAM K.
McDANIEL
Executive V.P.
NBC Radio Network

In the annals of radio history, I think that 1962 will be remembered as the year the tide was turned in the campaign to measure the total radio audience. We have long suspected that we are being short-changed by outmoded circulation measurement techniques which do not reflect total listening. Important strides are now being taken to correct this gap.

Paradoxically, this weakness in measurement is a result of radio's lusty growth, for every hour approximately 2,700 new radios are purchased. Every four seconds, three radios are bought. Annually some 25 million new radios are sold.

This rate of growth is gratifying. But at the same time it is horrifying. Because it is audience growth that is not adequately measured.

Today the country has some 183 million radio sets. There are about as many radios in the country as there are people. The age of individual listening is here. And therein lies the problem.

Three-quarters of radio sets purchased today are self-powered. They are in automobiles. They are in shirt pockets. They move. They do not stand still. They do not plug into the wall.

Thus they cannot be measured by stationary mechanical devices. Such mechanical measurement was for years a reliable indication of our circulation. But the great bulk of today's listening—and the growing part—is pretty much unmeasured. This is a tremendous handicap to all of us.

NBC Radio has been watching this trend for years. Accordingly, in the fall of 1961, we were the first network to take positive action, commissioning a research organization to undertake a pilot study. This study was an encouraging indication of the tremendous size of the self-powered radio audience. We have since met with officials of other research companies, discussing development of more effective measurement methods.

There is no doubt that the audience with car and portable radios is huge. For example, we have indications that, on a Sunday afternoon, it is nearly double the audience listening to plug-in sets.

Radio manufacturers have been most ingenious in producing multi-millions of auto and miniature radios. We must apply a similar ingenuity in finding methods to measure the circulation they represent.

Over the past few years the techniques of buying and selling advertising media have been developed to a highly scientific degree. The "emotional buy" still occurs but the great majority of media selections are made on the basis of thorough analyses of media characteristics as they fit the advertising requirements of a particular product.

It therefore becomes the obligation of the seller to provide the buyer with as complete an analysis of his medium as possible. Unfortunately, the ideal measurement situation does not exist for network radio. You do not have to look very far or very often to realize that automobile radios and self-powered radios account for the bulk of total radio listening. Efforts are being made to accomplish this total measurement but there is great room for improvement. This, unfortunately, is a problem which the whole broadcast industry must face.

Audience Action Through 'Focal Point' Programming

By
DONALD H. MCGANNON
President
Westinghouse
Broadcasting Co.

THROUGHOUT the country, the citizen sees state, town and city governments struggling to cope with the huge problems of communities in transition. The needs of a growing population are coupled with extensive demands for new public services.

Time has shown that these twentieth century community crises cannot be adequately handled in a nineteenth century way. You might say that our community problems have outgrown the ability of our institutions to handle them.

Along with the rapidly multiplying complexities of our civic lives, there has burgeoned a widespread but very natural voter apathy. Many citizens who once possessed semblances of civic pride have joined the parade of the pessimists chanting, "You can't fight City Hall."

At the nucleus of this attitude is a serious absence of public understanding. In spite of the numerous editorials, documentaries, special programs and community projects initiated and presented by radio and television stations, it is still apparent that many citizens in their communities do not comprehend the real causes of their troubles or the possible remedies.

To communicate better the causes and remedies, over two years ago we initiated a programming project at our Baltimore station (WJZ-TV) called "Focal Point." In great detail, the station has examined on a continuing basis Baltimore's civic problems: urban renewal, taxes, police administration park facilities, racial problems, to mention a few. In Boston, on WBZ radio and TV, the "Focal Point" concept is now exploring "Government 1963," local and state, in the areas of morality, modernization and manpower.

In both Boston and Baltimore, "Focal Point" focuses on critical community problems, seeking to diagnose the basic issues involved and to present workable solutions. Most importantly, the concept is designed to arouse public opinion and to bring that opinion to bear in full force on those responsible for providing remedies.

"Focal Point" aims to marshal all the forces of mass communications, including the press, on a set of particular problems throughout an entire year. If this were all there was to it, the experiment could fail. After all, for years now, enlightened pressmen and broadcasters have expended time and talent to explain and meet civic crises. The mass media have had to achieve continuing significant results, without one important, absent ingredient—audience action.

With this in mind, the WBC stations have purposely designed "Focal Point" to move citizens to communicate their definite recommendations to their Councilman, Alderman, Selectman, Representative or Senator; to encourage citizen participation in hearings on proposed legislation; to generate active party participation; to inspire active interest in young people.

It is our hope that this concept of public action activated by local stations and coordinated with the press will spread across the country and at the very least result in renewed citizen response. Audience action, even in minimum proportions, is an important weapon in surmounting the public apathy that endangers our expanding communities.
