Preface

This book has been prepared from official FCC information and government publications from neighboring countries. Every effort has been made to make it as complete, accurate, and easy to use as possible. Television, fm, and a-m stations in the United States, Canada, Cuba, Mexico, and the West Indies are indexed by geographic location, frequency, and call letters. All stations currently on the air, plus those that have temporarily ceased operation and those that hold construction permits, are listed. A key to the station listings and an explanation of the symbols used in the listings are included; consult the table of contents for the location of this information.

The frequencies of broadcast stations are assigned by individual governments in accordance with international agreements. In this book, the assigned frequencies of a-m stations are given in kilohertz (kHz), and the frequencies of fm stations are given in megahertz (MHz). (One kilohertz is one thousand cycles per second, and one megahertz is one million cycles per second.) In keeping with the most widely used practice, the frequencies of television stations are given in terms of channel numbers rather than actual frequencies.

The frequencies (sometimes called "channels") for a-m stations are classified according to the intended coverage areas of the stations assigned to each frequency. Local channels are for use by low-power stations that serve limited areas. Regional channels are for use by medium-power stations that serve areas of intermediate size. Clear channels are primarily for use by high-power stations that cover wide areas; however, low-power and medium-power stations are often assigned to a clear channel when they do not interfere with the dominant stations on the channel. In the list of a-m stations arranged by frequency, the classification of each channel is included in the frequency heading. In the case of clear channels, the country or countries having priority of use of the channel are indicated.

The a-m listings include day and night power (in watts) and notes regarding operating schedules (authorized hours of operation). Because of the action of a layer of the upper atmosphere called the ionosphere, the signals of a-m stations travel much greater distances at night than during the day. For this reason, interference between stations is a greater problem during nighttime hours. To minimize the possibility of interference, many stations are required to reduce their power at night; others are limited in the number of nighttime hours they may operate ("limited-time" operation); and a great many others are permitted to operate during daytime hours only. The schedule notes in the a-m listings identify stations not authorized to operate unlimited hours.

For fm stations, the power (in watts) and antenna height (in feet) of the station are given. The power shown is the effective radiated power. This is the transmitter output power multiplied by a factor that takes into account the fact that the station antenna concentrates the power toward the horizon, thus giving the effect of greater transmitter power. The antenna height is the height above the average level of the terrain between two and ten miles from the antenna. A minus sign preceding the antenna height means the antenna is the indicated number of feet below average terrain (for example, in a valley).

Both the effective radiated power and the antenna height affect the coverage area of an fm station; increasing the power, the height, or both increases the distance at which the station can be received. Typical ranges for various combinations of power and height are given in the following table. (These are average values; actual reception distances in individual cases may be either greater or less than those shown.)

Power (Watts)	Height (Feet)	Range (Miles)
100	100	10
1000	200	20
3000	300	35
10,000	300	45
25,000	400	55
50,000	500	75
100,000	2000	100

In the United States, fm stations are classified according to the areas they serve. Class A stations are intended to cover local areas. They have a maximum power of 3000 watts (for antenna heights above 300 feet, the power limit is reduced as the height increases). Class B and C stations are intended to serve wide areas. Class B stations are assigned in most of the northeastern United States, in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, and in all of California except the northern part. They are permitted a maximum power of 50,000 watts. (This limit decreases as the antenna height increases above 500 feet.) Class C stations are assigned in the remainder of the United States. They have a maximum power of 100,000 watts. (This limit decreases as the antenna height increases above 2000 feet.) Class D stations are 10-watt noncommercial educational stations. (Some fm stations, authorized before the present rules went into effect, have powers in excess of the maximums stated.)

In the United States, the frequencies from 88.1 through 91.9 MHz are reserved for the use of noncommercial educational fm stations. Class A, B, C, or D stations may be assigned to any of these frequencies. In the remainder of the fm band, certain frequencies are allocated for class A stations, and others are allocated for class B and C stations. These are identified by letters after the frequency headings in the list of fm stations arranged by frequency. The frequency headings also contain the channel numbers used by the Federal Communications Commission to identify the fm frequencies.

In addition to the frequency, power, and antenna-height information, fm stations equipped to broadcast in stereo are indicated. Thus, regardless of where you travel, you can select those stations providing stereo broadcasts.

The completely integrated alphabetical call-letter list is an important feature of this book. It provides a comprehensive one-source reference to the a-m, fm, and tv broadcast stations of North America.

While the information for each station has been checked and rechecked, and the entire list is computer-compiled to insure even greater accuracy, errors are inevitable in a work of this magnitude. I welcome any corrections or comments from users.

North American RADIO-TV STATION GUIDE

NINTH EDITION

by Vane A. Jones

This handy book contains listings for all the radio and television stations in the United States, Canada, Mexico, and the West Indies—over 10,000 stations in all. The nearly 5500 am stations, over 3300 fm stations, and over 1200 television stations presently in operation, scheduled to start operation soon, or temporarily off the air are each listed in three ways—by geographical location, frequency (or channel), and call letters.

This book is more than just a listing of stations, however. Important statistics such as power (day and night), height of antennas, and sharing of time with other stations are given. Also listed is the network affiliation for each station. Educational stations are designated, as are fm stations broadcasting stereo.

Regardless of your interest in radio and television, this book is a must for you. If you are traveling, it will list the stations broadcasting your favorite network in the area—or tell you what stations are in the city or state you are in. If you enjoy pulling in distant stations (DX'ing), this book will help you identify each signal quickly. For the radio and television time buyer, and others engaged in broadcasting activities, this book serves myriad uses. Each entry has been checked and rechecked and the book listings computer-compiled, making this the most accurate and up-to-date guide available.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Vane Jones is engaged in many activities, but his first love is this book. Whenever possible, you will find him in his study, with a television set and two or three radios all operating at once. He can recite call letters and tell you the history of stations by the hour. He has prepared eleven previous editions—the first was published in 1958 as a result of his DX'ing activity. With each edition, his list of followers grows, primarily because of the personal attention he gives each entry and the hairline accuracy for which he is famous.
