Preface

This book has been prepared from official information, and every effort has been made to make it as complete, accurate, and easy to use as possible. Television, fm, and am stations in the United States, Canada, Cuba, Mexico, and the West Indies are indexed by geographic location, frequency, and call letters. All stations currently on the air, plus those that have temporarily ceased operation and those that hold construction permits, are listed. A key to the station listings and an explanation of the symbols used in the listings can be found on page 6.

The frequencies of broadcast stations are assigned by individual governments in accordance with international agreements. In this book, the assigned frequencies of am stations are given in kilohertz (kHz), and the frequencies of fm stations are given in megahertz (MHz). (One kilohertz is one thousand cycles per second, and one megahertz is one million cycles per second.) In keeping with the most widely used practice, the frequencies of television stations are given in terms of channel numbers rather than actual frequencies.

The frequencies (sometimes called "channels") for am stations are classified according to the intended coverage areas of the stations assigned to each frequency. Local channels are for use by low-power stations that serve limited areas. Regional channels are for use by medium-power stations that serve areas of intermediate size. Clear channels are primarily for use by high-power stations that cover wide areas; however, other stations are often assigned to a clear channel when they do not interfere with the dominant stations on the channel. In the list of am stations arranged by frequency, the classification of each channel is included in the frequency heading. In the case of clear channels, the country or countries having priority of use of the channel are indicated.

The am listings include day and night power (in watts). Because of the action of a layer of the upper atmosphere called the ionosphere, the signals of am stations travel much greater distances at night than during the day. For this reason, interference between stations is a greater problem during nighttime hours. To minimize the possibility of interference, many stations are prohibited from operating at night; some are permitted only limited nighttime hours of operation; still others are permitted to operate unlimited hours but with reduced power at night. The schedule notes identify stations that operate with these restrictions.

For fm stations, the power (in watts) and antenna height (in feet) are given. The power shown is the effective radiated power. This is the transmitter output power multiplied by a factor that takes into account the fact that the station antenna concentrates the power toward the horizon, thus giving the effect of greater transmitter power. The antenna height is the height above the average level of the terrain between two and ten miles from the antenna. A minus sign preceding the antenna height means the antenna is the indicated number of feet below average terrain (for example, in a valley). Both the effective radiated power and the antenna height affect the coverage area of an fm station; increasing the power, the height, or both increases the distance at which the station can be received.

In the United States, fm stations are classified according to the areas they serve. Class A stations are intended to cover local areas and have a maximum power of 3000 watts. Class B and C stations are intended to serve wide areas. Class B stations are assigned in most of the northeastern United States, in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, and in all of California except the northern part. They are permitted a maximum power of 50,000 watts. Class C stations are assigned in the remainder of the United States. They have a maximum power of 100,000 watts. Class D stations are 10-watt noncommercial educational stations. (Some fm stations, authorized before the present rules went into effect, have powers in excess of the maximums stated.)

In the United States, the frequencies from 88.1 through 91.9 MHz are reserved for the use of noncommercial educational fm stations. Class A, B, C, or D stations may be assigned to any of these frequencies. In the remainder of the fm band, certain frequencies are allocated for class A stations, and others are allocated for class B and C stations. These are identified by letters after the frequency headings in the list of fm stations arranged by frequency. The frequency headings also contain the channel numbers used by the Federal Communications Commission to identify the fm frequencies.

In the fm listings, stations equipped to broadcast in stereo are indicated. In the am, fm, and tv listings, stations that specialize in religious, news/talk, country music, or black programming for a significant part of the broadcast day are identified.

The completely integrated alphabetical call-letter list is an important feature of this book. It provides a comprehensive one-source reference to the am, fm, and tv broadcast stations of North America.

The information for each station has been checked and rechecked, and the final lists have been assembled by computer for even greater accuracy, but in a work of this magnitude some errors are inevitable. The listings in this edition include approximately 4500 changes based on information received up to March 15, 1979. If you are aware of any changes that occurred prior to that date but were missed in this edition, I would appreciate having the information. Comments from users of this book are always welcome.

NORTH AMERICAN RADIO-TV STATION GUIDE 13th Edition

Here in one handy reference are listed the important statistics about the authorized television, fm, and medium-wave am broadcasting stations in the United States, Canada, Mexico, and the West Indies—more than 11,000 stations in all.

The stations are listed three ways, by geographic location, by frequency, and by call letters. Network affiliations are shown, and non-commercial educational stations are identified, as are stations that carry religious, news/talk, country music, or black programming for a significant part of the broadcast day. For fm stations, power and antenna height are listed, and stereo stations are noted. For am stations, both day power and night power are given. To make the listings as complete as possible, stations not on the air but expected to begin or resume operation soon are included.

If you enjoy pulling in distant stations(DXing), you will find this book a great help in identifying the stations you hear, and it will tell you where to tune for stations in a particular country or region. When you are traveling, you can find out what stations operate in the area where you are, which ones carry your favorite network or type of programing, and which ones broadcast in stereo. Time buyers and others involved in broadcasting will find the information useful for a number of purposes.

Approximately 4500 changes have been made in this edition to make the listings reflect the latest station information. Each entry has been checked and rechecked, and the station lists have been computer compiled. Whatever your interest in broadcasting stations may be, you should find this the most convenient, accurate, and up-to-date guide available.

Vane Jones is engaged in many activities, but his first love is this book. Whenever possible, he is in his study, with a television set and two or three radios all operating at once. He can recite call letters and tell you the history of stations by the hour. Since the publication of his first station guide in 1958 his list of followers has grown with each edition, primarily because of the personal attention he gives each entry and the hairline accuracy for which he is famous.
