BESS JOHNSON SPEAKS . . .

HOT and heavy flows the debate about daytime serials. Learned folk with long faces express alarm, contending that the five-a-week dramas are doing something vague but dreadful to the American mind. Equally learned folk with slightly less long faces take the opposite view and praise the serials to the skies as a fine and wholesome type of entertainment for millions.

We don't pretend to know the true place of the daytimers in the American cultural scene. We do know that there are all kinds of serials and that some of them please us, while others don't. We, like the public at large, don't agree among ourselves as to which we like and which we don't.

Since daytime serials are such a large part of the radio menu, we've decided to explore the whole subject fairly deeply. To start the discussion, let's hear the opinions of a recognized expert in the field, Bess Johnson. Bess stars in NBC's serial which uses her name, and she has earned the title of "Queen of Daytime Radio."

Bess begins with the obvious point that daytime serials are tremendously popular, and she asks, "Why?"

Answering her own question, she says that serial characters make stable, reliable friends. It is true, she points out, that most characters have vices as well as virtues, for no audience would swallow the empty-headed saints of early movie days.

But serial characters have one outstanding trait: They are predictable! Miss Johnson is convinced that listeners find real pleasure in their ability to judge what each character will do when confronted with a certain type of situation. She believes that one of the trials most people undergo is their constant doubt as to the way their real friends will conduct themselves.

Serial authors spare us such worries, Miss Johnson says. There is never much doubt as to a character's reactions and attitudes. For this reason, the serials provide us with a type of genuine relaxation—an "escape" from some of the strains and tensions of real life.

We believe Bess has put her finger on one important point. We will, from time to time, seek other expert opinions on the subject—and we'll especially welcome your ideas!

—The Editors.

"QUEEN of Daytime Radio" is the well-earned title of Bess Johnson, serial actress

Photos of a Nazi Prisoners' Camp

Smuggled Out By NBC's Alex Dreier

Hunger Stalks Behind Barbed Wire in Prison for Captured Officers

NAZI prison-camp pictures below and on the following pages were smuggled out of Germany on December 6, 1941, by NBC's commentator, Alex Dreier. Bleak and dreary as this camp for officer war prisoners was, the Nazis considered it a model establishment and allowed foreign correspondents to visit. In other prison camps—and in the notorious concentration camps—conditions are undoubtedly far worse than those shown here. The photographs were taken by Paul Dickson of MBS, who accompanied Dreier. For Alex Dreier's analysis of Nazi propaganda methods, see article on page 3. And for a personal study of Dreier himself, see page 13.

NAZI HAUPTMAN'S icy glare forces a French prisoner to change his story of the terrible food served in the camp. Alex Dreier is seen listening at the right. This and the prison pictures on the following pages were taken on candid-camera film. Dreier hid the film in his shoes when he fled Germany, causing the cracks seen in many of the pictures. NAZI PROPAGANDA: Double-Barreled

"In the primitive simplicity of their minds the masses are more easily victimized by a large than by a small lie . . . some part of even the boldest lie is sure to stick!"—Adolf Hitler, "Mein Kampf"

By ALEX DREIER

THE Nazis not only treasure, but revere, the "lie" . . . in the over-all Hitlerian strategy, it is, and has proved to be, as indispensable as the bullet, as the panzer, if not more so . . . Refinement of anything is an art . . . but the refinement of the "lie," as developed by the self-styled "racial supermen," is art with the degree of science . . . its Master of Arts was obtained when it stabbed to death the democratic Weimar Republic . . . and the Ph. D. was conferred after it had leveled nine countries in Europe to the ground. The Nazi "lie" not only gave birth to, but furnished the momentum for, the Wehrmacht's columns of steel which were, and are, as are all columns of steel, no respecters of persons . . . National Socialism, as the avowed philosophy of nihilism, is in itself based on the "lie" and further, is a personification of the "lie" in the social, economic and political fields.

The life-blood of National Socialism is the propagation of the lie . . . and that is essentially what makes Nazi propaganda . . . for National Socialism is an intangible something seen only as a reflection of its propaganda.

Functioning on the premise that nothing succeeds like success, the Nazis have exploited to the nth degree the susceptibility of the human mind to more readily absorb the fantastic, the banal, rather than the actual and rational—the appeal, of course, being made essentially to the craving for "things unreal and simple" so predominant in the mental make-up of ninety percent of the average population, be it German, French or American . . . the other ten percent, viewed as an insignificant factor, is not even taken into the calculations.

A lie is one thing, but to tell it, certainly another . . . and in the telling there lies the factor which has given to Nazi propaganda the success which it has enjoyed, and still enjoys . . . the variations range from a gross untruth through twisted truth down to an actually truthful statement skillfully cloaking the main point at issue . . . and within that range there are the elements of threat and coercion, on the one hand; flattery, exaggeration, ridicule, on the other hand.

The source of all Nazi propaganda is not, as is generally believed, Dr. Goebbels—the shrunken, crippled little devil incarnate who heads Hitler's machinery of abuse and deceit, of foul-

Take a Vacation at "HOLIDAY INN"

Bing Crosby and Fred Astaire Offer Some Zippy Entertainment!

HOLLYWOOD, always aiming at the target of being different, sometimes hits it without trying. Which is what happened when Paramount made "Holiday Inn." Really unique idea for this picture was hatched in the rhythm-gaited brain of Irving Berlin when he was inspired to write a song for each individual American holiday and build a musical around it. Result was a zippy, made-to-order outlet for the talents of crooner Bing and the nimble-footed Astaire, who's provided with two dancing partners—Marjorie Reynolds and Virginia Dale. Quartet's antics leave you with a "let's go places" feeling!

MARJORIE REYNOLDS, Astaire's dancing partner, literally leaped from a saddle in a western film to Cinderella role in Astaire's arms!

VIC and SADE

The Cooks Are Herded
Out Into the Night
When Uncle Fletcher
Stakes His Claim on the Family Davenport

FIT WAS late. Almost nine o'clock in the evening at the small house half-way up in the next block. Sade Gook and her fourteen-year-old son, Rush, were seated in the living-room. Sade was darning socks while Rush, who was seated in his father's easy chair, read aloud from one of his more hair-raising romances.

"Third Lieutenant Clinton Stanley," Rush read, "was clothed in his heavy deep-sea diver's suit. He estimated that he was forty-nine fathoms below the surface of the sea. Very carefully he peered around a floating school of octopuses and was immediately rewarded by a glimpse of his prey. There, sure enough, stood a band of counterfeiting Treasure Hunters. The handsome young officer straightened himself to his full height and advanced to place the scoundrels under arrest. But at this moment Lady Margaret emerged from a cluster of seaweeds and ran rapidly forward, her tiny feet in their fashionable French spats beating a sharp tattoo across the ocean floor."

Sade looked up from her corner of the davenport. "Hasn't she got any deep-sea diver's suit on?" Sade asked curiously.

"Beg pardon, Mom?"

"How can she come trottin' along the bottom of the sea? Them fashionable French spats of hers—"

"By George, that's right. Lame-brain author got up on the wrong side of the bed when he wrote this."

Rush's reading was interrupted now by a familiar call at the kitchen door.

"Hi-de-hi, ho-di-ho!"

"Here," said Sade, "is Mr. Papa at home. And about time, too."

Vic came into the room and he appeared to be pleased with himself. Sade looked at him suspiciously. Rush continued with his reading.

"I bet my family wondered what's become of me," said Vic.

"Yes," Sade said dryly. "You said you were gonna saunter to the drug store an' buy some cigars. Here it is nine o'clock. What if we'd had a five-hundred game scheduled with Fred and Ruthie Stembottom?"

"I'm sorry, kiddo," Vic replied with little contrition in his voice. "Well, I'll make a full confession—"

"Thought we'd take in a show at the Bijou," Sade said spitefully. "An elegant picture there. What is that elegant picture at the Bijou, Rush?"

Rush looked up from his book. If he was startled by the question, he gave no indication. The answer was on the tip of his tongue.

"Gloria Golden an' Four-fisted Frank Fuddleman in 'You Are My Moonlit Dream of Love, Apprentice Able-Bodied Seaman McFish'."

"S'posed to be grand," said Sade. "I called over at Kneesuffers' but you weren't there."

"No," Vic confessed, "I was at Razorscum's. Here's what happened. I sauntered over to the drug store as I planned. I chatted five minutes or so with Louie Nierstheimer an' bought my cigars. Then I strolled home. Out in the alley by the garbage-box I encountered Charlie Razorscum. Well, Charlie an' I got talkin'—"

"I expect," said Sade sarcastically, "it's more enjoyable way of spendin' an' evenin' skulkin' out by garbage-boxes than comin' home to your family an'—"

"Hear me out, Sade, please," begged Vic. "Charlie Razorscum an' I were talkin' about going fishin'. That was my downfall. That was why I didn't come home. See, I lose all sense of time an' space when the conversation gets around to fishin'. Like as not the Peoples Bank Building could fall on me an' I'd never notice it once I get to talkin' fishin'. I hope you forgive me."

Sade chuckled. "Oh, well—"

"I actually did lose all sense of time an' space," Vic continued. "You take a dyed-in-the-wool fisherman, he gets completely submerged in his passion—"

"Um," said Sade not particularly interested. "Is Charlie planning on a fishing-trip this summer?"

"Yes."

"Same old stuff?"

"How ya mean same old stuff, Sade?"

"Oh, Charlie Razorscum invitin' fifty or sixty friends to climb in his car an' drive 500 miles an' go fishin'. He does that every year."

"But not this year, Sade," Vic said chuckling. "However, he is going fishing, an' I in all likelihood will go along, because we're going on the train."

"Oh?" asked Sade.

"Going on the train to some fishing-grounds in Minnesota where a guy can haul 'em in by the barrelful," said Vic triumphantly. "It's up at Piscatorial Monster, Minnesota."

"Huh?"

"That's the name of the town," Vic said with relish. "Piscatorial Monster, Minnesota."

"Not a very pretty name," Sade commented.

"Perhaps not," agreed Vic, "but it's a name with attractive implications for your fisherman."

Sade giggled. "I never heard of such a rotten name," she said.

"It has a musical sound to me," Vic said good-naturedly. "As a matter of actual fact, kiddo, the original name of the town was Heap Big Pickerel. The Indians originally called it that, see? But civilization come along an' rich folks started inhabiting the region an' I guess some of the fashionable ladies felt that Heap Big Pickerel didn't have a stylish sound, so—"

"I should as leave tell people I lived in a place called Heap Big Pickerel as I would Piscatorial Monster," commented Sade.

"Oh, well," Vic dismissed the subject and brought up a new angle. "I haven't told you," he said, "about Charlie Razorscum's cute scheme yet."

"What's that?"

Vic rubbed his hands and hugged the scheme to himself. He was almost gleeful when he released the secret information.

"Although our fishing-party travels to Piscatorial Monster, Minnesota, by train," he said, "nevertheless Charlie's automobile goes along!"

"Oh?"

"A car is a mighty handy thing to have when you're in the wilds. See, there are hundreds of lakes around Piscatorial Monster, Minnesota. Ya need transportation to get from one to the other."

"Un-huh," said Sade. "Charlie gonna ship his auto?"

"Nope," Vic replied laughing. "That costs a lot of money."

"Gonna have somebody drive it?"

"Nope."

"Well, tell."

"He's gonna disassemble his car,"

VALIANT LADY

Beginning a Fiction Version of the Thrilling Story of Radio's Beloved "Valiant Lady"

FUGITIVE Joan Hargrave-Scott, portrayed by Joan Blaine (above), seeks to clear her dead husband's name

PART I

THE Chicago Express roared through the night. The drone of the whistle was strangely exciting, its eery call in the darkness an invitation to adventure. The clickety-clack of the wheels was cheering in the hushed quiet of the observation car that swayed ever so slightly as the train sped on its way toward Chicago.

A well-dressed man moved crabwise through the car toward the diner ahead. He looked hopefully at the beautiful girl who sat relaxed in a seat at the far end of the parlor car with a magazine in her lap. His glance swept over the youthful grace of her figure and dwelt with open admiration on her pretty face, framed in its halo of dark hair. He saw more than just beauty. There was humor, intelligence, steadfastness in this girl's face. He moved regretfully onward, wishing in his heart that there was some way he could arrange an introduction.

Joan Scott was absorbed with her own thoughts. She took no notice of the stranger as she idly turned the pages of her magazine and looked at the pictures with unseeing eyes. For the first time in months she felt a touch—the slightest touch—of happiness. She was leaving the small mid-western city of Fairville, Ohio, and all its unpleasant memories behind.

The whistle wailed again. There seemed to be a promise in its cry. Then it began to rain—a hard, heavy spring rain that beat against the windows and trickled down in great streams. Joan put her magazine aside and walked out on the rear platform. The rain smelled good, and clean, and fresh. Joan knew in her heart that she was facing a new life. Would it be good or bad? What did the future hold for her?

Her trip to Chicago, she knew, was less a flight than a challenge to the forces that sought to bring her before a bar of justice. Not that she had done wrong, nor had poor Dr. Tubby Scott—her Tubby—who had become innocently involved and charged with a crime he did not commit. And now Tubby was dead. Joan thought of their life together in Fairville, of that last tragic night when she learned that Tubby had been killed in the mine disaster at Webster's Grove.

There had not been even a body to mourn over. The explosion that had taken the lives of thirteen others apparently had destroyed everything that Joan held dear. Tubby and she had lived together in Fairville under the name of Dr. and Mrs. Stephen Hargrave. And always they had been under the constant fear that Jolly Rogers, the keen-minded insurance investigator whose jovial laugh cloaked a hardness that matched his tenacity, might trace them to their hiding-place.

Poor Tubby! Joan thought of her young, tall, handsome husband with pangs of sorrow. When she learned of his death, life stopped for her. She, too, through Tubby, was a fugitive from justice, but it had been worth it to be with him. Now that he was gone, life didn't seem worth living. Only courage, determination and hope pulled her through those long, terrible weeks, and, after shaking off the gloom of mourning, Joan realized that death, after all, was only a comparative event in the adventure of living. Joan took a new point of view. Her life as it stood had been empty and bare until she realized that the immaterial possessions with which we are endowed can become suddenly very dear. Among these were truth and honor.

To Joan, the honor of Dr. Truman Scott, her dead husband, became of paramount importance. Her closest friend, Eleanor Richards, encouraged Joan's new point of view and saw her launched on a new course. Joan had but one objective in life now—to clear Tubby's name and indirectly her own. By doing this, she could return to the life and the people she knew and loved.

At first Joan was all for packing up and returning to New York. To her mind, the one honest thing to do was to face Jolly Rogers, Dr. Abendroth and the others. But her friend argued that by returning to New York Joan would accomplish nothing except her own imprisonment, perhaps the disgrace of Dr. Alec Gordon and his wife, Myra. Besides that, to clear Tubby's name would require time and money. Joan had eons of time, but in regard to money she was practically a pauper. There was little opportunity in Fairville; hence the trip to Chicago, where she could get a job, make money, meet people, and make friends who could help her.

And so Joan was speeding on her way to new life and adventure. She could not know that Jolly Rogers at last had traced her and Tubby to Fairville, that even now, the three-hundred-pound detective had men waiting to arrest her upon her arrival at the Union Station in Chicago. To a smart policeman, Joan's presence on the Chicago Express was almost the end of the chase. And Jolly Rogers was smart. He knew his battle was almost won. Joan, he thought, would be arrested when she stepped off the train the next morning . . .

JOLLY ROGERS, of course, had not figured on the sudden whims of Thomas R. Clark, publisher of the Chicago Dispatch and one of the wealthiest men in the United States. Nor could Rogers possibly have known what a factor the tumultuous romance of young Jeffrey Clark's was to become. In fact, Rogers knew Clark only as a headline name—a man who had inherited a newspaper with which he had won the distinction of being one of the great editorial giants of America. Rogers probably had heard of Clark's son, Jeffrey, as a wealthy playboy, a complete nonentity so far as the world of publishing, business, finance and insurance was concerned. Of Margie Cook, Jeffrey's blond and beautiful ex-New York dancer, Rogers had heard not a whit.

Rogers was not alone in his ignorance. Joan Scott, hurrying by train to face a new life in Chicago, knew even less than Jolly Rogers about the Clarks, father or son, or Margie Cook, the dancer. Joan knew only that she must be constantly on guard to avoid Rogers' detectives no matter where she met them. She was terribly conscious of her role as a fugitive. Therefore neither she nor the man who hunted her could know what was brewing on Chicago's Lake Shore Drive.

Lake Shore Drive is the Park Avenue of Chicago. It's the Windy City's Main Line. It's the Back Bay of the Midwest. If one stood on Lake Shore Drive and looked north, he would see an endless stretch of blue water on the right—Lake Michigan. To the left is a series of cement and steel cliffs—apartment buildings in which dwell the very wealthy. Scattered between these rearing skyscrapers is an occasional mansion whose grounds cover half a block—often a block—of lake shore frontage. These are the homes of the multi-millionaires—the homes of packers, the beef barons, the steel kings.

The wealthiest section of this eight-lane boulevard often is called "The Gold Coast," and the largest, most pretentious home on the Gold Coast was the faded, red-granite mansion of Thomas R. Clark. Now you probably don't know "Big Tom" Clark personally, but you've certainly heard of him—just as Jolly Rogers had heard of him. You've seen his picture time after time in the Sunday supplements, on the front pages of newspapers, on the covers of magazines. You've read the Chicago Dispatch, haven't you? Well, Clark owns that and a lot more. At fifty-five, Clark was a tall, thick-set man with a firm face, and one of the most influential men in the country.

IN CONTRAST to him was his son, Jeffrey, who, among friends, was known simply as Jeff. Jeff, it must be said, bore a striking resemblance to his father, but right there all similar characteristics ended. At the age of twenty-two, Jeff was a combination of Peck's bad boy and a wastrel. He was spoiled, obstinate, too free and easy-going. And yet, with all these faults, young Jeffrey Clark had a pleasant personality, a good mind (though he rarely used it) and a lovable spirit.

On the Saturday morning that Joan Scott was due to arrive in Chicago, Jeff took breakfast with his father. Jeff had just returned from one of his periodic flying visits to New York. Of late these trips had increased in frequency, the reason being a young, beautiful blonde known in theatrical circles as Margie Cook, or simply "Cookie." Although T. R. Clark knew very little about Miss Cook, he was familiar with the former escapades of his son. The dressing-down he gave his son that morning was quite worthy of description but unprintable. To make matters worse, Jeff found himself in a rather embarrassing position. Cookie had telegraphed that she was arriving in Chicago at the Dearborn Street Station that morning and that her intentions were matrimony.

Partially to soothe his father, partially to escape from the room, Jeff explained that the girl he really was in love with, the one he probably would marry, was about to arrive. If he could be excused . . .

Now, one of the oldest habits of Big Tom Clark was to make use of the unexpected. Instead of excusing his son, he decided to accompany him to the station. Jeff had no alternative. He stepped into the limousine, and off they went. The one thing that must not happen, Jeff knew, was for his father to meet Cookie. In his heart of hearts, Jeff knew that Cookie was not exactly the type of woman of which his father approved.

In fairness to Miss Cook, it must be said that her background was most unusual. From a humble beginning in the Bronx, she had worked her way up to the second line of an Abbott musical. This was the crowning point of her professional career. From there she went to even greater heights, principally as a friend of men who could afford her acquaintance. For Cookie had expensive tastes. Currently she found herself in Jeff Clark's good graces, and, as many of her associates frankly put it, Cookie was not getting any younger. She was quite determined to retain her position in Jeff's affections, consolidating it by marriage if possible.

Jeff felt intuitively that his father and Miss Cook might find little in common. He therefore directed the chauffeur not to the Dearborn Street Station but to the Union Station. What he would do there was nebulous, but do something, he must.

The Chicago Express arrived two minutes late. Joan stepped off the train and made arrangements for her baggage. Through the high, steel-framed windows, the morning sun shone down in wide beams and spilled across the station floor. Two Chicago detectives stood in the center of the echoing building. For the tenth time, they read the description of a woman that had been sent them from Fairville, Ohio. Jeffrey Clark steered his father toward gate nine as a mass of morning travelers poured in.

"Thought you said she was coming from New York," Clark, Senior, growled.

"She is, Dad, but—well, I suppose the train was rerouted."

"Well, where is she?" Thomas R. demanded. "Do you see her?"

"No. Not yet."

Just as necessity is the mother of invention, in times of stress great schemes are born. Jeff thought quickly. He knew he'd have to meet someone that was at least a reasonable facsimile of a girl he might marry. Jeff's was a practised eye. He saw Joan Scott cross under the arch, and sighed with relief. Giving an excellent imitation of excitement, he broke away from his father, ran twenty or thirty feet and threw his arms around the startled young woman.

"Don't worry," he whispered. "It's okay!"

Joan tried to push him away while, at the same time, she directed a stream of polite invective at the tall, good-looking young man who stood with his arms still about her. Her words would have withered any male less sophisticated than Jeff Clark. To him, however, the tirade was not wholly unexpected, nor yet unjustified. He talked fast—he had to.

"All I want you to do is meet my father," he begged. "I know it's a mix-up; but look, Miss, if you'll just come over and say hello to my father . . ."

Joan looked about her for a friend in need. Instead she saw two men walking rapidly toward her. One of them was plunging a slip of paper into his pocket while, at the same time, nudging his companion. With a fugitive's ability for recognition, Joan spotted them for what they were—blue suits, black shoes, gray hats, solid necks, heavy hands—detectives. She knew it was the law.

Joan's reaction was a gauge of her intelligence. She threw her arm into Jeff's instead of trying to push him away. She looked up into his slightly dissipated face and smiled brightly. She permitted herself to be directed toward Jeff's father. Jeff, though he didn't know Joan's name, handled the introduction of "his girl" with mastery.

"Well, Dad, here she is."

"Hello," Joan responded as the two detectives approached within ten feet. They halted and looked in wonder at the reception accorded the woman they sought by one of the wealthiest men in Chicago.

"Welcome to Chicago, my dear." T. R. rumbled in one of his most sympa-

INGRID BERGMAN WILL PLAY MARIA ROLE IN "FOR WHOM THE BELL TOLLS"

John Carroll Is Embarrassed; Hollywood Holds Last Premiere for the Duration; Barbara Stanwyck Gives the Perfect Answer to a Victim of "I-itis"!

HOLLYWOOD By FRANCES LONG

No more tinsel. Hollywood had its last fling in formal premieres for the duration with "Tales of Manhattan," which brought out every top name in the colony, as well as the stars' most elaborate bibs and tuckers. Already, most full-dress suits have been replaced by uniforms of America's armed forces and they won't come out of moth-balls until the news of victory for the United Nations wings through the ether. Drastic new dimout regulations will further curtail the night life of Hollywood, too. From now on there will be no more brilliantly lighted theater marquees and flood-lights that were used for the openings of everything from a vegetable market to a shoe-repair shop . . .

The shouting dies in Movietown as to who will play the part of Maria in Hemingway's "For Whom the Bell Tolls," but there is still a bit of tumult over the fact that Ingrid Bergman supplanted Zorina in the role after production started and will really play the part. Not since the ruckus kicked up over who would play Scarlett O'Hara in "Gone With the Wind" has there been such a furor over a movie role. But what really makes the change an item is the sporting way that Zorina took the news, despite the fact that it was a big disappointment to her. Said Zorina, "I have learned that one cannot always win. Once in a while everyone must take some bumps. Unfortunately, there are too many truly tragic lost decisions taking place all over the world today for any of us to feel sorry for ourselves because of personal disappointments." Bravo, Zorina! . . .

Barbara Stanwyck replies! There are plenty of players in Hollywood who do an excellent job of overworking the pronoun "I" in all their conversations when it comes to telling about the wonderful parts they get, how well they do them, and how important their work is to the studio; but Miss Stanwyck isn't one of them. When Barbara's work for the day is over, she drops all shop talk. At a dinner party the other night, however, she was unfortunate in being seated next to a star who was badly afflicted with "I-itis." Barbara, conspicuous by her silence while she listened to the other's monolog, was finally asked what she thought of picture work. "It's nice work—if you can forget it!" she retorted calmly . . .

Can you top this one? John Carroll went to Washington recently and came back with an anecdote which might win a prize for an embarrassing-moment situation. John was hurrying down a capital street when a man stopped him, held out his hand and said, "How are you, Johnny?" He seemed to be well acquainted with Carroll and his doings; but Mr. Carroll couldn't place him, racked his brain as he stalled for time. Still drew a blank. However, inasmuch as the stranger appeared so friendly, he figured the only thing to do was act the same way. John inquired in turn how things were going for him, and thinking he might get a clew to his identity, asked, "And how's your father?" He got it when the answer was, "Oh, he's fine, thanks—still working hard at being President." For Mr. Unknown was Elliott Roosevelt, whom John had met a few years back when Elliott was in Hollywood . . .

From bullets to bonbons! Edward G. Robinson, who soared to stardom as a gangster with a machine gun, now takes the poison route in "Flesh and Fantasy," where he plays the role of a murderer who tries to kill a girl by feeding her poisoned candy! . . .

Chuckle of the week: Jeanette MacDonald, now on army camp tour singing for Uncle Sam's boys, was introduced to an officer's family after one of her shows. Everyone was impressed at meeting a real Hollywood star, until Jeanette was introduced to the captain's seven-year-old daughter, Barbara Ann. The little girl acknowledged the introduction gracefully enough, but managed to hiss, "And don't call me Ann." Taken aback, Jeanette said, "Why not, my middle name is Ann too." Barbara glared back, "Well, maybe you can take it, but I can't" . . .

Bovine competition was what Jerry Colonna had to contend with when he, Ellen Drew and Richard Denning were making scenes for the Ice Capades. Set was a real barn with all the barnyard props, including cows and chickens. The cameras were ready to grind, and Colonna started delivering his lines in a most spirited manner but was completely drowned out by a chorus of moos from the bossies in the scene. Even Jerry's backtalk didn't stop the racket, and the scene had to be shot over a dozen times before the final take. If theater-goers note, when the picture is released, that Jerry looks a little more startled than usual in this sequence—bovine moos is the answer! . . .

Bombshell Betty Hutton has a new heart interest, and a big one. Maybe that won't be news, but how she met him is! Harrison Carroll, columnist, was chatting with Betty at a night-spot. Sitting at a table close by was Kenny Morgan, publicity man, and his friend, Sid Luft, test pilot at Douglas.

CAROL BRUCE models the latest Hollywood accessory for boulevard strol's. It looks like a knitting-bag, but it's really a gas-mask!

Sid asked, "Who's the luscious blonde?" and opined that he'd certainly like to meet her. Next day in Carroll's column was an item which said that Betty would like to meet the man who was with Kenny Morgan the night before. Kenny read it, called Carroll and told him Sid felt the same way, and the two arranged a meeting. Now Betty, in the East, is deluged with special deliveries, flowers and long-distance calls from Sid, and the romance has all the earmarks of being serious. Tennyrate, the village is waiting for Betty's return to the Coast and an engagement announcement . . .

Vital statistics: James Cruze died in Hollywood on August 4 at the age of fifty-eight. As a movie actor he made three hundred pictures in five years during the silent-film era. Later, as a movie director, he was listed among the ten best in the film colony. "The Covered Wagon" was probably his greatest directorial job . . .

Victor McLaglen, back on the Fox lot to play a role in "China Girl," after an absence of several years, scoffed at the superstition of walking under ladders, black cats—in fact, all of them that's plagued folks through the centuries. Vic used to be skittery too, but he's cured. And here's why: Vic and a good friend were in South Africa when World War I broke, and their one thought was to get back to England and get in the scrap. So Vic was all for taking the first boat out. His friend wanted to wind up some unfinished business, and suggested they wait for the second one. They wrangled, finally decided on Vic's one "unfailing" superstition—the flip of a coin. His friend tossed the coin, and the decision fell to the second boat. On board, they got word that the first boat had been sunk and all passengers lost. Vic was thrilled—until his chum told him that the coin had two heads! . . .

Here and there: Remember Wesley Barry, number one freckle face of the movies? He's in the Navy now . . . Rapier-tongued Dorothy Parker says that Vic Mature's body has gone to his head . . . Carmen Miranda will sing "Tic Tac Do Meu Caracao" (You Make My Heart Go Tick Tock) in 20th Century's forthcoming "Springtime in the Rockies."

GREER GARSON in a scene from M-G-M's "Mrs. Miniver," in which Greer holds bullet-riddled body of son's wife (Teresa Wright)

MOVIE REVIEW

"MRS. MINIVER"

Cast: Greer Garson, Walter Pidgeon, Dame May Whitty, Teresa Wright, Reginald Owen, Henry Travers, Richard Ney, Tom Conway, Christopher Severn, Henry Wilcoxon. A Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, produced by Sidney Franklin and directed by William Wyler. Film is based on Jan Struther's best-selling novel. Screenplay was written by James Hilton, Arthur Wimperis and George Froeschel.

Type of Picture: A blueprint of family life in war-time, which provides a heart-stirring stimulant for everyone who sees it.

This Is the Story: Clem Miniver, an English architect, his wife, Kay, and their three children, who live in suburban England, with its typical customs and traditions, face the horrors and heart-breaks of World War II—the siege of Dunkirk, the bombing of their home, the death of loved ones, the destruction of much they hold near and dear—with quiet courage and an unshakable faith in ultimate victory. In the opening scenes, before war becomes a grim reality, there is a thread of humor which reveals with deft strokes the pet weaknesses of wives and husbands the world over. Every woman who ever paid too much for a hat will see herself in Mrs. Miniver; every man who ever wanted to turn in an old car for a new one will chuckle at the way Clem Miniver handles the situation. And every man, woman and child who's ever lived on the wrong side of the tracks and dared to compete with those who lived on the "right" side will respond to the old station master's mixed emotions when his Mrs. Miniver's rose wins over Lady Beldon's at the annual flower show. Too, everyone who's ever waited for a loved one in danger to return, who's watched death snatch at youth while they stood powerless to prevent it, will applaud the courage of Mrs. Miniver. For, in the dauntless spirit of this English woman there is reflected that of every mother, every defense worker, every soldier on land, sea or in the air, who fights to preserve the freedom of all people today in the firm conviction that God will defend the right.

Verdict: To date, the greatest picture to come out of Hollywood in 1942. Greer Garson, Walter Pidgeon, Dame May Whitty, Teresa Wright, and Henry Travers are excellent!—family.

CAL TINNEY APOLOGIZES . . . HOLLYWOOD STARS BACK "NOBODY'S CHILDREN"

"State Fairs of the Air" Replaces War-Canceled Festivities; Phil Baker Rallies His Clan; Movie Millions Go to Army, Navy Relief Funds

WASHINGTON

By LT. COL. CURTIS MITCHELL

The War Department had three unusual guests recently. They came to apologize for remarks that had been made on a national radio network. We believe it is the first time in American history that a broadcaster and his managers have knocked at your Government's door with an olive branch in one hand and an apology in the other. The callers were Cal Tinney, his sponsor, and a network manager. Cal's call was made to retract in person his accusation that Army officers spent the profits of the Army's Post Exchange system on beer parties. That night, Cal told his public that he had been mistaken . . .

We talked to one of Rudy Vallee's closest friends the other day. Then we heard Jimmie Fidler announce that Vallee had gone into the Navy. Actually, as we write this, Vallee has not "joined" any branch of the service, but it won't be long now until he is in some active sort of war work . . .

It's a small world. During the last several years, Hal Rorke of Hollywood has publicized all of the great CBS stars in the West. My own trips to Hollywood have always included a visit to the Rorke CBS office. Several months ago, he moved to a better job in New York. Came the war, and he accepted a captain's commission in the Army Air Forces.

We talked together in my office just the other day, and he looked quite dashing and military in his new uniform. But he was unhappy here in Washington. It was too crowded and his old friends were all out west.

Mysterious orders reached him one day. He was to go to Hollywood immediately for a new assignment. His new job: Back at the old stand as public-relations officer for the Air Forces' new radio show. The program's new name: Sergeant Gene Autry . . .

Joan Crawford seems to be nominated as the star who will make the first motion pictures about the Waacs, the women of our Army. Which leads many an officer to protest that the situation is already had enough. Not that the Waacs aren't pretty and sweet as well as useful, but too many of our best assistants are marching off to a warrior's skirt and blouse in Des Moines. Many a Government department here is losing some of its key women to the Waac officers candidate school. What will happen when Joan glamorizes the job is too fearful to contemplate . . .

Do you recall those early summer nights when you went to your theater and found a screened request to contribute to Army and Navy Relief? A hat was passed, or a collection plate, and you dropped your dime or quarter on it. I saw the last act of that magnificent effort take place in a room on the third floor of the Munitions Building. Joseph Schenck, head of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and Harry Brandt, representing the country's theaters, came to the War Department, where they called on Under-Secretary of War Patterson, who is president of Army Emergency Relief. An admiral, head of Navy Relief, was already there. In the glare of bright lights, with news-reel cameras spinning, those men representing the motion-picture industry and the motion-picture audiences of America gave a check for one million dollars each to Navy Relief and Army Emergency Relief. You Americans, through your motion-picture theaters, raised two million dollars for the relief of soldiers and their dependents.

A few minutes later, Stanton Grifis of Paramount Pictures, who organized the all-star Hollywood Caravan which toured the country so successfully last May, opened his check-book and wrote two checks for $191,000 each for Army and Navy Relief, the profit from that magnificent tour.

and his forty-fifth birthday on this date. Wires of invitation have been sent to all persons named Baker in the metropolitan area and to servicemen stationed in or about New York who answer to the name of—you guessed it. Celebrated show-folk due to attend include Bonnie, Benny, Belle and Kenny Baker . . .

Stopped in to say "hello" to Mark Warnow, who is responsible for the cue or mood music that sets the stage for "The March of Time" program aired on NBC. Mark has been on the show for four weeks and in that time has accumulated two hundred musical cues, all original themes. As he explained, sometimes a piece of hot news comes over the wire after the dress rehearsals. This necessitates special music, written to fit the incident. Arrangers and copyists are sent an S O S, and by the time the show hits the air Warnow has the music . . .

Frances Williams, an ambitious young lady from Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, worked her way to New York just to sing for Dick Leibert on the "Sing for Dough" program. She was so thrilled and nervous, she almost collapsed while on the air but recovered and finished her song amid great applause. This is the stuff success is made of . . .

Del Sharbutt, the mellow-voiced fellow who greets you on the "Amos 'n' Andy" show, has become radio's highest-paid announcer. Starting out in radio at the time Bob Hope did, Sharbutt was announcer on Bob's first show. Grinningly, Del says, "—and it laid an egg big enough to kick all over Manhattan." Yet both boys are now knocking them for a loop in their own fields. A handsome fellow, just past his thirtieth birthday, Sharbutt has got producers thinking of him in terms of motion-picture contracts, and 'twouldn't surprise us nohow if he succumbed to the lure of grease-paint . . .

Ask a soldier what kind of town Hollywood is, and you'll get a most enthusiastic answer. The filmtown's inhabitants have gone out of their way in every instance to help servicemen enjoy their leaves. The motto is "Wine 'em, dine 'em, give 'em a lift." Occasionally newcomers don't run into this sort of thing on their first visit to Hollywood, but they're bound to get it on their second try. The Merry Macs, on their way to the studios for radio rehearsals, picked up two servicemen, who voiced the opinion that Hollywood was a gyp town. Here they'd been in town for two days and hadn't seen any movie or radio celebrities yet. Their spirits seemed quite dampened. The Merry Macs then asked if the boys had some time. When the answer was yes, they marched the boys up to NBC, introduced them to Mary Martin, Bob Crosby and a host of others. The boys, thrilled beyond expectation at the hospitality and kindness of their hosts, were nearly bowled over when they discovered with whom they had been riding. They were partied around, acquired enough autographs to last for the duration . . .

When the "Nobody's Children" show was saved by the benevolence of Mary Pickford, it seems there was more than one fairy godmother hovering about. Learning about the situation, Barbara Stanwyck, Eddie Cantor, Bob Hope and Jack Benny have taken up the cause. Each is sponsoring the program for a number of weeks, in the hope that by that time the show will have found a permanent backer. Walter White, Jr., who has been heading this social service series for over three years, will not desert the airlines, even though he is becoming a motion-picture actor. He has been cast in the movie version of Arch Oboler's play, "This Precious Freedom," in which he portrays the role of an American dirt farmer.

CHICAGO

By BILL ANDREWS

This town was planted on the prairie—and it's still a prairie town. Chicago's never gotten the hayseed out of its hair, and it's never gotten out of the habit of working for the farmers of mid-America.

And so, when the war kiboshed a flock of state fairs in these parts, Chicago radio folk put their heads together. Result, WLS is launching something new—"State Fairs of the Air." The Indiana radio fair will run from September 7 to 12, and Illinois will take the following week. The fairs will have special days—Governor's, Youth, Farm Machinery, etc. Saturday will be Midway Day, with a special hour of merry entertainment, calliopes, games, "rides" and such. Future Farmers, 4-H Clubs are helping.

There'll even be contests and prizes. Big event for women is cooky baking. There'll be sixty-two prizes, and WLS expects 15,000 dozen cookies to be submitted. Boys at the servicemen's centers here will eat 'em up.

What puzzles me is why, since fair cancelations were frequent throughout the country, the networks missed such a fine chance to help the country folk . . .

Romance of the week: Les Mitchel is all out for Madelon Grayson, photog's model and occasional radio actress. Les is important people on Radio Row. Formerly director of "Step-mother," he's now taking over "Helen Trent" and "Backstage Wife" from Coast Guardsman Blair Walliser. But the brightest new show for Les is a half-hour weekly joyfest on CBS featuring Fred Grady. But, to get back to the romance, it's a blaze of long standing that's bouncing to a climax and wedding bells come about October 1 . . .

Dad Pickard, head of the mountain-music Pickard family, called up to draw greetings. He's heading back to Hollywood to try to bite himself off another piece of movie pie. Between trains, he was chucked into "Farm and Home Hour" to the satisfaction of all concerned . . . Which reminds me, "F. & H." has a special on August 21, when Uncle Sam's Forest Rangers put in their five-hundredth appearance on the show. That's a lot of appearances . . .

That Coast Guard dedication in Michigan recently must have been worth seeing. Especially when Gale Robbins (Bernie looker-singer) was dunked by accident during a breeches-buoy trip and then sang in a dripping gown. Captain's wife rescued her, took her home and ladled out brandy—strictly to fight the chills, says Gale . . .

Paul Whiteman's scheduled for a stage appearance here as you read this. More important, he's been signed again as musical director for Burns and Allen, who, by the by, are scheduled to switch from NBC to CBS.

GLADYS SWARTHOUT RECORDING SESSION AT RCA-VICTOR STUDIOS DESCRIBED

THE RCA-Victor recording studio in East 24th Street, New York, was set up for a late afternoon session of disk-making. The "set-up" is the actual placing of music-stands, conductor's desk, microphones and the other paraphernalia necessary to the very serious business ahead.

To anyone who has been present at such events the easy-going, almost nonchalant attitude of all concerned is ever an inexplicable mystery, because the making of records calls for the utmost attention, accuracy and assurance. But the regulars, those artists to whom recording is an everyday thing, can be tremendously at their ease yet keenly conscious of the numerous matters involved.

Fred Maisch, veteran Victor engineer, a man who has "taken down" the great—from Caruso on—sticks his head out of the control-room window. His practised glance tells him that something is wrong. He rushes into the studio proper and rearranges some of the music-stands, pulls some chairs farther apart, gives a tug or two here and there and retires into his own domain.

We had been to these things before, so we knew that the best vantage point would be the control-room itself. Mr. Maisch looks up—a bit questioningly, we thought, but he lets it go. There was work to do.

Presently the side doors of the studio open and a chattering, clowning company of musicians stroll in. The hubbub of the voices can be heard through the control-room loudspeaker. Again one noted the complete naturalness of these men. Their attire, slack suits in most cases, attested further to that.

In a few moments Gladys Swarthout appears on the scene. She, too, is dressed for comfort—perhaps for the country would be better describing it. Slack suit, flat play-shoes and all, she looks much smaller than she is on the stage. There are huddles all over the place. The conductor huddles with his musicians, the control-room men—there are several of them now—huddle, and right in front of us we can see outside the window another huddle, peopled—to use a term—by Miss Swarthout, her husband, Frank Chapman, and Ronald Wise, associate director of music for Victor.

Mr. Wise, portly, genial, throws in a suggestion or two; Mr. Chapman, likewise; Miss Swarthout, likewise.

Also present is Lester Hodges, Miss Swarthout's piano accompanist, who does not participate in any huddling, unless, of course, he is doing so with the muses. Mr. Hodges is there to assist the artist in two voice and piano numbers. The main event, though, is a series of items to be released in a Victor Red Seal album.

The conductor comes out of the huddle and says, "Are you ready, Miss Swarthout?" She nods assent. He continues, "We'll start with the Cole Porter number, 'Begin the Beguine.'"

They rehearse the number. There are the usual stops, with the conductor and the singer discussing some subtle point of musical trigonometry or such. It is all so lofty and cultural, popular music or no popular music.

We are personally fascinated by this phenomenon of recording. We ponder, as only we can, on all the thought, the brain-beating problems, the experimentation, the endless work involved in the making of records. It is too much for us, we are such a simple soul. But we remain there, because we are fascinated, we insist.

From the loudspeaker connected with the control-room comes the booming voice of Mr. Wise, "Fine, let's take it." This is it, the recording. If it goes badly, it must be done over again, with a consequent loss of time.

Mr. Wise says "Quiet" in that unquiet, booming manner of his. Everybody is quiet now. The conductor raps for attention, a bell buzzes and a little red light flashes on the conductor's desk. The actual recording is begun.

Miss Swarthout sways as she sings. Her rocking movements are graceful to watch. Mr. Chapman looks on, intent on the scene before him. At the conclusion of the piece the singer asks her husband, "All right, baby?"—obviously a pet name, or are we being obvious? Mr. Chapman says, thoughtfully, "I think we can do it better, darling. Don't you, Ronald?" Mr. Wise says, "Yes, let's take another one. I want this number to be a humdinger."

The second "take" over, everybody remarks on its effectiveness. Several more songs are recorded and the story is repeated—rehearsal, "take," rehearsal, "take," and so on. They finish half of the album. Next come the numbers with piano. But before that Miss Swarthout drinks a cup of hot tea. The recess lasts about ten minutes. Only she and her accompanist return to the studio. Mr. Chapman is in the control-room. When these are finished, Miss Swarthout says, "Now I feel a little tired." She'd worked five hours.

Mr. Wise saunters over to her and says, "Remember, 5:00 p.m. tomorrow. We've to do the rest of the album." Miss Swarthout and Mr. Chapman say in duet, "We'll be here." They leave. Mr. Wise remarks, "Swell people to work with." He tells us that the album will contain eight performances. The other pieces are "Through the Years," "My Heart Stood Still," "I'll See You Again," "Dancing in the Dark," "Mother," "The Man I Love" and "Give Me One Hour."

(Gladys Swarthout may be heard on "The Family Hour," CBS, Sundays.)

Music for a Lord

Johann Sebastian Bach wrote most of his chamber-music at Coethen, Germany, where he resided a little over five years in the service of Prince Anhalt-Coethen. He enjoyed his work there, with all that the post offered little in the way of encouragement to write big works. However, since there was no occasion for him to compose church music, we might not have had the Passion music and almost the complete set of Cantatas had he remained at Coethen.

Bach left the service of the prince only when the latter married his cousin, Henrietta Anhalt-Bernburg, who cared nothing for music and less for its disciples. Oddly enough, the prince's own interest in it waned.

But at Coethen Bach wrote the set of six "Brandenburg" Concertos, dedicated to the Margrave Christian Ludwig of Brandenburg. Some time in 1718 or 1719 the margrave met Bach, heard his playing, admired it and became one of his devotees. It is quite likely that he encouraged Bach to compose orchestral concertos, and given the commission the composer set about the task, completing it in March, 1721, two years later. Strangely, the music did not make a special furor, which puzzles those of us who see in it a greatness hardly compatible with such reactions.

(The Concerto in G Major, No. 4, written for violin, two flutes and strings, is one of the works in the all-Bach program to be offered by Albert Stoessel and the Chautauqua Symphony, Sunday, August 23, over the Blue Network.)

Ginny Simms' new show built for her talents

GINNY SIMMS came to radio five years ago. In that time she has climbed to an enviable position as a singer with a following. Today she recalls "almost with horror," as she puts it, the in-expert singing she did early in her career. She says, "I have proof that five years make a difference. Whenever I feel too sure of myself, I listen to one of the first recordings of my voice and, woman-like, compare it with those I make today. My overconfidence, if any, disappears, and the difference between the two recordings is so marked that it never fails to bring home one lesson—one must always seek improvement."

The attractive young woman's implication, of course, is that she isn't altogether satisfied even now with her work. That is always a good sign.

Born in San Antonio, Texas, Miss Simms and her family moved to Fresno, California, where she "grew up." She went to Fresno State College with the purpose of becoming a music-teacher. But the discovery that she "had a voice" interfered with that ambition.

In that case an enterprising girl takes steps. Which is exactly what Miss Simms did. She formed a trio, together with two of her sorority sisters, and they called themselves by the provocative name of the Triads in Blue. For two years they appeared at sorority, fraternity, club and other social affairs and finally made their radio debut at a Fresno station.

Soon after that the Triad got an engagement to sing in Los Angeles. There they learned that Guy Lombardo was seeking a singer for a series of broadcasts. In true Cinderella fashion Miss Simms made a bid for the job—and won it. Then came her association with Kay Kyser, and she was right there with him as he skyrocketed to fame.

Next autumn Miss Simms makes her debut in the double guise of mistress of ceremonies and featured singer in a new Philip Morris show. In the meantime, her two latest RKO films are to be released at about the same time. They are "Seven Days' Leave" and "Here We Go Again."

In passing, Miss Simms' musical possessions include an appreciable knowledge of piano-playing. She practices the piano almost as if she were developing a twin vocation, truth of the matter being that she earnestly wants to acquire as much musical knowledge as possible in order to increase the scope of her singing.

MEET ALEX DREIER AND ABO HOSIOSKY, NBC'S STAR COMMENTATOR TEAM

Blue Outmaneuvers Rivals, Signs Ray Swing; Schubert Scans
Naval News; Portrait of the Non-Existent Perfect Commentator

By BILL ANDREWS

Young Man From Berlin

You expect learned commentators to be old and cynical. But the man across the table from me was neither. He was young, enthusiastic, carelessly dressed, his halfback build gone a bit hefty from desk work and lack of exercise.

Alex Dreier is certainly not impressive in appearance, but his easy, flowing talk crackles with ideas and enthusiasms. It crackles also with picturesque expressions that never could get past the blue pencils of radio continuity editors.

Alex didn't approve very highly of the idea of a "personality" interview. Finally, with a wry comment about supposing he was "talent" in the radio business, he reeled off some quick facts about his background.

He admitted he was born in Honolulu but hedged on the date. He went to school in San Francisco, then attended Leland Stanford University, majoring in political science. He played football, threw the javelin, was a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon and took an A. B. degree.

He worked for United Press in San Francisco and became editor of United Press Illustrated. Later he was transferred to the New York cable desk of U. P., always watching for a chance to secure a foreign post.

"My drawback," he said, "was that I didn't speak any foreign languages, so I bluffed. When I saw a real chance to go to Germany, I moved into an apartment with several Jewish refugees. From them I learned a little about the language. More important, I met Abo. Abo's wonderful. He's fantastic. But we'll get to him later. This will tell you what I thought of him: When I left for Germany, I said to him, 'Abo, if I come back with nickels and dimes in my pockets, we're going to work together.'"

Dreier went to Berlin in 1940, served as U. P. correspondent until 1941. Then he transferred to the NBC staff, broadcast regularly from the German capital in those taut, terror-filled months when the Nazis smashed into Russia and prepared for open war against the United States. Gestapo spies dogged Dreier's steps. Censors made it increasingly difficult to get news onto the airways. Goebbels' stooges alternately pleaded, whined, threatened.

Convinced the broadcasts from Berlin had become worthless, Dreier and the CBS and MBS Berlin reporters urged their home offices to cancel the programs—urged them in messages deliberately sent through open channels watched by Nazis. As a result, Dreier and his fellow Americans were banned from the German radio. "It isn't so much what you say, Herr Dreier," a Nazi official told Alex. "It's how you say it!" Dreier grins about that, says, "Lord, that was the only way we could get over anything."

Weeks of cold fear followed, while the Nazis refused to permit Dreier to get out of the country. Part of the fear was personal—"They didn't love us. We didn't want to be in their hands," is the way Alex put it. Greater was the fear of danger to America and the longing to get home and tell the real story of the Germans.

Dreier's visa finally cleared on December 6, one day before Pearl Harbor. A train carried him to Switzerland and freedom. In his baggage and on his person were concealed photographs, papers, notes, some of which were used in preparing material for this issue (see pages 1-3).

Dreier's trip home was an air-race through West Africa, Brazil, Trinidad, Bermuda, New York. The young reporter immediately was thrown into contact with high circles. Mrs. Roosevelt met him, took him home to dinner with the President. And at this point Alex Dreier spoke with real enthusiasm. He said: "The Nazis hate Roosevelt twice as much as they hate Churchill, because they fear him more. He has been their most steadfast, brilliant, ruthless opponent. In Berlin we measured an American's worth by the degree of hate he earned from the Nazis."

Dreier had even more important business on hand. He flew to San Francisco, was met at the airport by Joy Leatherby. She was an old sweetheart, to whom Alex had really been talking on the radio every time he mentioned the Nazi "Strength Through Joy" movement or the leather situation in Germany. In a few days the couple were married and east-bound by train—with the bridegroom suffering from trench mouth (one by-product of the hardships in Germany). It was a kissless honeymoon, for the disease is contagious.

Recovery brought reunion with Abo—Dr. Abo Hosiosky, Latvian by birth, ten years assistant professor of law at the University of Berlin, former Berlin judge, brilliant scholar, determined enemy of all things Nazi. Alex had the "nickels and dimes" (in the form of radio contracts), and the reporter teamed up with the professor in a unique radio news team. Alex has the knowledge of current events, of political cross-currents, of news values. Abo has the deep understanding of Europe's social, economic and cultural set-up. Between them, they make a first-rate combination for news commentary.

Today Dreier broadcasts from Chicago for NBC at 5:45 p.m. EWT Saturdays, Coast to Coast, and at 7:00 a.m. CWT, heard only in the Midwest.

Between broadcasts, Alex is racing to complete a book, "Berlin Blues," in which he tells the story of the terrifying impression the Russian war has made upon the ordinary German citizen.

Commentator Comment

Ed Murrow, CBS London commentator, votes for the jet in the jet-versus-spray controversy over the proper method of handling incendiary bombs . . . I recently mentioned that NBC snatched ace commentator Raymond Gram Swing from MBS. But the Blue Network has the last laugh, because it found him a commercial sponsor and lifted him out from under NBC's nose. Swing shifts in September . . . Frazier Hunt, CBS commentator, heads for North Carolina to report Army maneuvers there by radio . . . Paul Schubert, WOR commentator, will have both East and West Coast stations taking his "War News Analysis." Schubert's specialty is the interpretation of naval news. Schubert is an Annapolis graduate and a former naval officer . . . Former CBS Berlin correspondent, who escaped from the Nazi capital the same day as Dreier, is Howard K. Smith. His book, "Last Train from Berlin," will be published September 8.

The Perfect Commentator

He doesn't exist. There isn't any such thing as a perfect craftsman in any trade—certainly not in any so complicated and problem-ridden trade as news analysis. But if he did exist, here's what I imagine he would be like:

Most of the time, his voice would be rather like Elmer Davis'. It would have that cool, steady, impersonal flow that was common to Davis and the writers on some of the better papers. This would give us news crisply, swiftly, with a minimum of opinion. But sometimes he would show emotion, more than Davis ever gave us. For moments like the present, when we need verbal kicks in the seat of our overconfidence, I'd recommend the prophet-of-doom style, which Earl Godwin handles so expertly and with such effect.

Enthusiastic styles for chery times are harder to choose. For tremendously joyous occasions of real importance, Gerhard Schacher's style, minus his accent, would be good. For those rare moments when genuine sentimentality of the tear-jerking type was wanted, Kaltenborn would be a good model to follow.

As to background, the perfect commentator ought to be a former military man with battle experience; a former career man in the state department; a former businessman, preferably in heavy industry; an ex-newspaperman with no less than ten years' experience, much of it foreign and much of it in Washington; a scholar with a Ph. D. in history; and a poet of first rank.

A rapid calculation indicates a man could easily acquire this background in about 150 years. This would be all right, except for my last specification—that the perfect commentator should be well under 60 years of age!

SEA WARFARE is a familiar subject to Paul Schubert, MBS commentator heard at 10:30 p.m. EWT, Mondays through Fridays, Coast-to-Coast. Schubert, shown here with charts and a model fleet, graduated from the Naval Academy at Annapolis and served as an officer in Uncle Sam's Navy

NBC MAN HELD BY JAPS; AUSSIES GIVE PLAY-BY-PLAY REPORT OF BOMBING

Short-Wave Traffic Jam Between U. S. and Australia Cleared; CBS Adds New Nations to Program Schedule; Thibault Sings for Fighting French

Bert Silen, Jap Prisoner

BERT SILEN, NBC's Manila correspondent who has been missing since the fall of the Philippine capital, is safe but a prisoner of the Japs, according to word received by A. A. Schechter, head of NBC's news and special-events division.

The communication to Schechter from a high-ranking U. S. Army official confirmed earlier reports that Don Bell, with whom Silen made that memorable December 9 eye-witness broadcast of the bombing of Manila over NBC, had been killed and mutilated by the Japs.

According to the word received by Schechter from the American officer, Silen is interned with other American correspondents at Santo Thomas College in Manila.

Silen and Bell, along with Ted Wallace, who worked with them on the Manila broadcast, recently were honored by the National Headliners Club in Atlantic City for their feat in bringing listeners a vivid account of the Japanese attack, against a background of gunfire. (I clearly remember this thrilling broadcast from Manila. It was mentioned in MOVIE-RADIO GUIDE issue of December 27.)

Reports of Bell's fate had been sent to this country earlier by Melville Jacoby, NBC and Time and Life correspondent, who was killed later in an airplane mishap in Australia.

Silen was born in Marietta, Ohio, and later moved to San Francisco and then to Boise, Idaho. He was graduated from Stanford University in 1923. In 1928 he went to the Philippines to become manager of standard broadcast station KZRH.

WGEO Shifts Frequency

Each morning from 6:00 to 8:00 a.m. EWT, WGEO, the General Electric station at Schenectady, New York, transmits a special program of news, entertainment and jive to our troops in Australia and New Zealand. When first inaugurated this broadcast was made on WGEO's regular frequency of 9.53 megs, with the result that considerable interference was caused to Melbourne's program for North America, radiated from 7:25 to 8:30 a.m. EWT, over VLG2 on 9.54 megs, only ten kilocycles away. Realizing the fact that no good-will would result from such a daily occurrence, G. E. officials promptly applied for and were granted permission to shift the frequency of WGEO to 9.65 megs for this transmission. Now Australia hears America, and we hear Australia with perfect clarity. WGEO's program for "down under" includes daily news and news commentaries from 6:00 to 6:30 a.m. and sports and news from 7:30 to 8:00 a.m. EWT. Also included are rebroadcasts of choice network features such as "The Army Hour," Mondays at 6:30 a.m.; "The Hour of Charm," Tuesdays at 6:30 a.m.; "The March of Time," Saturdays at 6:30 a.m. and a special edition of "Make-Believe Ballroom," prepared and announced exclusively for the troops on the same day at 7:00 a.m. EWT. Two brand-new features just added are Jimmy Dorsey and his orchestra every Wednesday at 6:30 a.m. and "Hawaii Calls," Fridays at 6:30 a.m. EWT.

Townsville Bombing

Axis and Japanese accounts of the recent bombings of Townsville, Australia, mentioned casualties and considerable damage done. To prove these claims false the Australian Broadcasting Corporation broadcast a recording of an eye-witness account of the air raid which went something like this: "This is your commentator broadcasting from a high hill overlooking Townsville and the bay. There seem to be about four planes up there. They must be at least 18,000 to 20,000 feet high. The searchlights have picked out one of the planes now. It is out over the bay. There go the ack-ack guns . . . Now the plane is over this part of town and can be heard plainly. There go the guns again, but they don't seem to be getting much closer to the target. There go the bombs, I think. Yes, they burst way out in the bay. Someone is firing with a lighter machine-gun back of us, but the plane is way out of its range. There are about a dozen searchlights crossing and criss-crossing their beams in beautiful interlacing effects. There go tracers. One of our fighters must be getting close on that Jap's tail. I see a burst of light. Maybe he got the 'Zero.' That would be a good job at that height. He seems to be losing a little altitude. It's doubtful if that Jap will ever get back to his base. The plane has disappeared now behind a tall tree. Don't see our fighter or any of the other raiders. Guess it is all over."

Short-Wave "Shorts"

According to Martin Agronsky speaking from Australia, our planes now in the Australian area are at a disadvantage when dog-fighting with the Jap Zeros, since the Zeros are made for very high-altitude combat and have a fast rate of climb, very necessary in the cloudless, clear southern skies. Our pilots are good and our planes excellent, but not designed for such high-altitude fighting; can be left behind when the Japs decide to go up above . . . Static which made a transatlantic circuit unintelligible halted the first of Norman Corwin's CBS series from London, but an air-raid alert over London couldn't halt rehearsals for the next. When the sirens sounded, Corwin immediately made arrangements to transfer his 60-piece orchestra and large cast to bomb-proof studios . . . In an anti-Axis propaganda gesture, the British Broadcasting Co. is short-waving daily Conrad Thibault's own composition, "I'm a Soldier of De Gaulle," throughout the continent and to all parts of occupied and unoccupied France. The song was recorded in America, prefaced by a two-minute speech in French by Mr. Thibault, who is of French descent, and flown to England by bomber . . . Two more European languages have been added to the CBS short-wave news department schedule. Twice-daily broadcasts in Czech and twice-weekly broadcasts in Slovenian have been arranged to concentrate further Columbia's European program on the continent where CBS international stations WCBX, WCRC, and WCDA have shown some of their greatest signal strength . . . According to the editor of the London Daily Telegraph, only fourteen percent of the pre-war supply of newsprint (paper stock upon which newspapers are printed) is now available in London and this at three times its 1939 price. This accounts for the small size (four pages) and scarcity of London newspapers. Despite this fact, he stated, no newspaper has been forced out of existence, since the available supply of newsprint is rationed evenly to each publisher . . . Bright-eyed, brown-haired, pretty Maria Luisa Sierra, recently arrived at Radio City from Mexico to do a series of commentaries on American women for Mexican listeners of NBC International, is finding it difficult to accustom herself to the Manhattan streets now quiet because of gas-rationing. "Why," she observed, "there must be more motorists on Mexico City roads than right here on Fifth Avenue" . . . Says Lord Haw Haw, from Berlin, "The British people are heading for a psychological breakdown. If they don't get the second front it will come soon, but if they do get the second front it will come later and it will be most overwhelming in character." Sez you!

News About the Stations

In case you are interested to learn what Tokyo is telling listeners in Europe about us, listen to the Japanese transmission to Europe, broadcast daily from 2:55 to 6:30 p.m. EWT, over JZJ (11.80) and JZI (9.535). News in English is given at 3:00 and 6:00 p.m. EWT. JZJ is usually best . . . August Balbi of Los Angeles, informs me that the Singapore-Shonan short-wave station is now being heard on a new frequency of 11.98 megs, daily from 8:30 to 11:00 a.m. English messages to India are broadcast at 9:45 a.m.; the war news in English at 10:00 a.m. EWT. A second Malayan station is being heard daily from 6:00 to 10:00 a.m. EWT, on a frequency of 6.100 megs. This is likely the Penang transmitter.

IDEAS are exchanged and programs discussed at daily sessions of NBC's international division, with manager Fred Bate (center) presiding. This group plans programs for broadcast to other countries via NBC short wave in English, Greek, German, Portuguese, Swedish, Turkish, many other languages

HOW TO USE THIS SECTION

All daytime programs for Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday between the hours of 7:00 a.m. and 3:45 p.m., inclusive, are listed in this section.

The daytime programs listed under the heading "Monday Through Friday Programs" are all programs broadcast Monday through Friday at the same time each day.

Half-way down the some column and under the some time-line you will note the word "exceptions." All programs listed under this heading are those which are not broadcast at the same time Monday through Friday but are different every day or broadcast in a series of two or more, such as Monday-Tuesday, Monday-Wednesday-Friday, etc. In other words, if you are looking for a news program or a dramatic serial broadcast at the same time each day it will be listed under the "Monday Through Friday" heading. All other programs will be found under "Exceptions."

Paige Is Wausau Boy

Raymond Paige's career has always been emphasized by references to Los Angeles and New York, and few listeners realize that the celebrated leader heard over CBS was born in Wausau, Wisconsin, and later moved to Chicago with his family before the Paiges decided upon Los Angeles as a permanent address. His first venture in music was as conductor of his high-school orchestra touring California. He played violin in theaters before turning to radio and directing.

Service for Servicemen

The entire nation now knows how New York entertains uniformed men visiting the big town. Since the "Stage Door Canteen" went on the air, mothers and fathers everywhere have learned by ear of the atmosphere and background of New York's most famous amusement place for servicemen and have "met" many of the stars who nightly visit the Canteen in East 44th Street to wait on tables when they are not entertaining. The Canteen program plans to parade an impressive array of celebrities over CBS stations and officials hope that numerous canteens may be opened throughout the United States wherever servicemen are stationed.

MARY JANE HIGBY
ELAINE CARRINGTON
wanted a girl to play Joan in "When a Girl Marries"
(5:00 p.m. EWT); she described a girl "five feet tall, slender, hazel-eyed, honey-haired and gay." Mary Jane Higby fitted right into her role and has hugged it snugly since she started. It's just a matter of chance that Mary Jane was born in St. Louis because her parents were both traveling in snow business, and Mary Jane was born (in a vaudeville trunk, as the saying goes) while her parents were making a stopover. Mary Jane's been a Hollywood child star, a night-club singer in New York, and then was claimed by radio as actress and singer. For the first time in her life she's settled where she can keep house (she's a plenty good cook), take vocal lessons, collect rare first editions.

Walking Juke-Box

Making an unannounced trip with Bob Hope, Jerry Colonna, Roy Rogers and several other performers to the Victorville (Calif.) Army flying camp recently, Dinah Shore finished her singing chore and slipped away with Hope to visit the hospital, where several wounded fliers were recovering from overseas action. There, without accompaniment of any kind, the star sang at each bed in turn, leading Hope to remark as they finished, "First time I ever saw a juke-box with legs!"

Made to Order

"Ravenscroft" sounds like a script-writer's idea of a comedy English butler's name, but that broad English accent that answers when Rudy Vallee addresses his "butler" actually is Thurl Ravenscroft, towering (six feet four) basso of the Sportsmen Quartet.

Jane Webb Takes to Wings

Pretty Jane Webb, Midge in "The Bartons," is the newest fledgling pilot in radio. And she's not going on that trip to California. Jane took her first flying lesson last week-end and liked it so well she's given up all thoughts about California to concentrate on piloting airplanes.

Rare Honor for Reporter
Robert St. John is the only American newspaperman to be elected to the exclusive Pater Noster, a writers' club. The club derives its name from the London street where, for centuries, the publishing business of England was centered. The street recently was wrecked by German bombers.

Schubert: Mass Producer
A modern composer who turns out a tune a month is considered extremely prolific, but according to Andre Kostelanetz, the great Franz Schubert habitually tripled that output. Over a period of fourteen years, he turned out masterfully written songs at an average of forty a year.

Likes His Work
Ted Steele, busy maestro of "Studio Club," hasn't had a vacation or day off for three years. He's planning one for 1947.

"Mighty good at those mating calls of various birds, isn't he?"

Rest Cure?

Peggy Mayer, script-writer of "The Story of Bess Johnson," decided that—like all good American citizens—she was entitled to a vacation. She took one—but she really needed one by the time she got away. She had to submit advance scripts for the time she would be away—which meant she had to write three a day instead of one!

Musical Family

Curley Bradley, "Club Matinee's" baritone buckaroo, comes by music naturally. Both his mother and father sang, and he has two brothers who can play guitar, banjo, saxophone, piano, drums and steel guitar. Curley himself plays the guitar and tenor banjo.

Nancy Norman
Nancy Norman, vocalist on NBC's "Sunday Serenade" with Sammy Kaye, is not only one of the youngest band songstresses but probably the smallest as well. She is four feet ten and a half, scales exactly one hundred. The seventeen-year-old singer was born in Los Angeles and had never been out of that city until she signed with the swing-and-sway bandsman three months ago.

Valiant Lady

thetic tones.

The detectives drew nearer, exchanged puzzled glances, then retreated. Obviously, to them, they had made a mistake. The woman they had come to arrest couldn't be an acquaintance of the Clarks—either father or son. Joan sighed with relief. A moment later, Thomas R. Clark took her arm and led her to the door of the limousine outside.

Mystification gave way to numbness as Joan rode up Lake Shore Drive with the two men, neither of whom she ever had seen before.

"Dear," the younger one said casually, "Dad's decided that you ought to stay at the house."

She didn't even know their names! But the score was even. They didn't know hers, either!

The limousine stopped before a red-granite mansion, and Joan's breath was taken away by its beauty and grandeur inside. As she looked over the house, she, in turn, was looked over by the butler, Nelson; the housekeeper, Mrs. Evans, and Clark's secretary, Lester Brennan. After all, she was Mr. Jeffrey's "intended," wasn't she?

Nelson showed Joan to "her room." The girl looked with wonder at the bedroom and at the rooms beyond. The sitting-room was laid out charmingly. There was a dressing-room, yawning closets, and a bath which caused Joan to gasp with astonishment. The marble and mirror palace was like a Hollywood picture set with everything designed to emphasize the bathtub, which was eight feet long and built of black onyx. It was sunken so that to reach it one had to descend several steps. There was luxury here that Joan never before had seen.

She had been roaming the apartment only a minute before Jeff entered. He stood leaning against the door, smiling sheepishly. There was something about him that was strangely likeable despite the jaded look about his eyes.

"I suppose," he asked, "that you'd like to know what this is all about?"

Joan certainly would, and told him so in no uncertain terms. Jeff told his story piecemeal. When he reached the end, Joan was not impressed. She told him she was leaving—and now. Definitely. Abruptly, the cockiness, the confidence dropped from the young man and his attitude became pleading. Miss Cook, he said, had just phoned that she'd been waiting at the hotel for half an hour.

"And," Jeff added, "to keep Cookie waiting is like throwing a match into a gasoline tank."

DESPITE the wisecrack, Joan saw real trouble in the young man's eyes. He was honestly worried—a thing Joan had doubted before. She found herself sort of liking Jeff.

"Would you do me a favor?" he begged. "Please. I know you don't owe it to me, but—" he paused—"if we could make this sort of arrangement. If you'd stay here for only an hour, I could run down and straighten things out with my girl."

"What difference will it make to your girl if I stay here or not?" Joan asked.

"I'm not thinking of her," Jeff quickly replied. "It's Dad. If you could humor him for an hour or so, everything'd be fixed. I'd come back a little later, you could leave, and I'd tell Dad that we had an argument, and the whole thing was broken off... please?"

Joan knew she never should have said yes. She hadn't meant to. It just slipped out. But after she'd said it, she felt a lot better. Jeff looked so relieved. She took off her coat, hat and gloves. It was at that point that Jeff screamed.

"Wait a minute," he cried, pointing at her hand. "Your hand... on your finger. That's a wedding ring, isn't it?"

"Yes," Joan said easily.

"You don't suppose my father noticed it, do you?"

"I don't think so. I've had my gloves on until now. I'm sure he didn't. From what you tell me of your father, if he had seen it he would have mentioned it—immediately."

"Yeah," Jeff said with obvious relief. "I guess you're right." He paused. "Would you mind explaining what you're doing with a wedding ring? You look so young and all. Why didn't you tell me you were married?"

Joan was slightly amused. "Well," she said, "to be truthful, Jeff, when you and your father... er... met me this morning, you didn't ask." Her voice became more serious. "As it happens, I'm not married any more—my husband was—was killed in a mine explosion."

"Oh," Jeff replied soberly. "I'm sorry. What mine did he work in?"

"He wasn't a miner. He was a doctor. They asked him to treat a number of cases of silicosis. He went down into the mine to see what was causing the disease. While he was down there—" Joan paused and her voice almost broke—"while he was down there, something happened—an explosion, then fire. That's why I came to Chicago. I had to find a job."

"Well," Jeff said brightly, "you don't have to look any further. If this little piece of hokus-pokus comes off without Dad catching on, I'll find you a job, if it's the last thing I do. Now about that wedding ring..."

"It wouldn't do for your father to see it, would it?"

"Hardly."

"Well, I'll do another thing for you. Jeff. I'll wear it on my right hand for the next few hours. But remember, I agree to play along with you today only because I know you'll get in trouble if I don't. That's the only reason and that's all I want to get out of it."

"You're wonderful. I never thought there were people who would do a favor just to be doing it."

(To be continued)

Read this thrilling story, adapted by Wiley S. Maloney, then listen to "Valiant Lady"—written by Howard Teichmann and broadcast over CBS Monday through Friday at 10:00 a.m. EWT, 9:00 CWT, 9:30 a.m. MWT, 8:30 PWT, under the sponsorship of General Mills for Bisquick and Gold Medal Flour.

Vic and Sade

said Vic triumphantly.

"You mean he's gonna take it apart?" asked Sade, who was slightly more interested. "Why's he gonna do that?"

Vic paused for dramatic effect. This scheme really was a good one and he wanted Sade to taste its full flavor.

"You don't anticipate the scheme, eh?" He chuckled. "It's about as ingenious a piece of strategy as I ever heard of. He's gonna take his automobile apart—"

"Un-huh. You said that once, Vic. What about it?"

"He's gonna take his automobile apart," Vic repeated, "an' us different members of the fishing-party will each take a chunk of it with us on the train!"

"Oh?" said Sade vaguely.

"As luggage, don't ya see?" said Vic brightly. "That way we don't hafta pay any heavy shipping-costs. I'll tuck maybe a carburetor or a spark-plug in my suit-case. Steve Chestbutter may slip a fan-belt or the steering-wheel in among his effects. Remember there'll be a good many of us in the party."

"You're gonna carry the whole automobile broke up in little pieces in your baggage?" asked Sade, impressed.

"Sure," answered Vic. "An' when we clamber off the train at Piscatorial Monster, Minnesota, we will reassemble the automobile."

"Well," said Sade hesitantly. "Wouldn't that be cheatin' the railroad? Looks to me like you're kinda half-way smugglin' the car to Minnesota."

Vic walked over to where Rush was seated and pushed his son out of the easy chair. Rush reluctantly moved to the other end of the davenport, where he continued reading about the career of Third Lieutenant Clinton Stanley. Vic continued talking about his project.

"I got a right to carry a steering-wheel in my valise if I want to," he said. "Charlie Razorscum is entitled to have a gasoline tank wrapped up in newspapers in amongst his luggage if he feels like it. Richigan Fishigan of Sishigan, Michigan, has volunteered to take charge of the engine-block. That will be cumbersome an' inconvenient to lug around an' all, but once he gets aboard the train he can have the porter put it on the suit-case rack and forget about it."

"Um," said Sade.

"How about the fenders?" asked Rush, suddenly interested despite his reading.

"Yes, Hilda?" said Vic, always careless about calling his son by his right name.

"Who's gonna carry the fenders?"

"You forget, don't you, that Charlie Razorscum's car has no fenders. Neither does it have a top. The hood an' the doors, Charlie plans to leave at home—"

"The rear axle, the transmission, the chassis?" asked Rush.

"All will be dismantled into portable sections," said Vic firmly.

"An'," said Sade in some wonderment, "you fellas'll have a whole automobile there in your suit-cases, huh?"

"It's about as neat a piece of strategy as I ever run into," said Vic, obviously willing to go on with details in the plan. He would have talked for the rest of the evening, but, at that moment, there was a knock at the back door. It was Uncle Fletcher, who was admitted by Rush.

"I want you people to go right ahead with your plans exactly as if I wasn't here," said Uncle Fletcher coming into the living-room.

"But," Sade said, "we haven't any particular plans for this evening, Uncle Fletcher."

"Fine," said Uncle Fletcher. "Rush, likely you're going to the moving-picture show. Well, you go ahead an' enjoy yourself. I may be here two, three, four, five days, see, Sade?"

"Dandy," said Sade cordially.

"All depends on the painter," said Uncle Fletcher cryptically. "Joe Veepers is the fella paintin' my bedroom. An' he's a slow-poke lame-brain."

"You're welcome here, Uncle Fletcher, no matter how long it takes. An' I know Vic will say the same thing."

Vic nodded from his corner of the room. If nothing else, Uncle Fletcher would make life in the Gook home slightly different.

"Now," said Uncle Fletcher, "I want you people to go right on ahead an' carry out your plans an' transact your business exactly as if I wasn't here. I'm not company. There's my valise on the floor there. It contains night-shirt, socks, an' underwear. When I get sleepy I'll take it upstairs an' go to bed. Reminds me of Arnie Holcomb there in Belvidere. You remember Arnie, Sade?"

SADE giggled. "I never knew anybody in Belvidere, Uncle Fletcher. I've told you that time an' again."

"Yes," said Uncle Fletcher. "Once ya meet Arnie ya never forget him. Well, Arnie was in the barber shop getting a hair-cut this particular afternoon an' he had the feeling something was missing."

Uncle Fletcher paused, then asked curiously, "What was missing?"

"I don't know," Sade said chuckling. She knew her Uncle Fletcher, who was quite prone to go wool-gathering. "Something was missing," Uncle Fletcher said baffled. "What was it, Sade?"

"Maybe his mustache," Rush suggested.

"No," said Uncle Fletcher still baffled. "I can't recollect what was missing. Made a terrible funny story, though. Just like Arnie Holcomb to pull off a stunt like that, huh?"

"Yeah," said Vic and Sade politely.

"He never had much sense to begin with," said Uncle Fletcher. "Did I tell you, Vic, that I'm comin' to visit you a few days? There's my hand-satchel on the floor there."

"Good," said Vic.

"Contains my night-shirt, socks, underwear," said Uncle Fletcher importantly. "Patent-leather necktie, handkerchief or two, couple shirts, comb an' hair-brush. Odds an' ends. My landlady's fixin' up my bedroom, Vic. Joe Veepers is comin' in to paint first thing in the morning."

"Your room'll look nice when he gets through," said Sade.

"You're certainly welcome to stay with us," said Vic.

"I'll stay just for the sleepin'," said Uncle Fletcher, "I'll take my meals over at Mis' Keller's same as always. But look, people, I want ya to go right on ahead an' carry out your plans the same as if I wasn't here."

"Okay," said Vic obligingly.

"I'm not company," Uncle Fletcher said. "I got my hand-satchel on the floor an' the minute I feel sleepy I can step upstairs an' go to bed. You won't even need to know I'm in the house."

"Uh-huh," Vic agreed.

"An' in the morning I'll get up an' go away an' there won't be any necessity for ya to see me until tomorrow night." Uncle Fletcher paused, cleared his throat and went on importantly. "Now, you've got your plans; I've got my plans. There don't need to be the least bit of confusion. As soon as you people leave I'm gonna take off my shoes an' read the paper."

"Leave for where?" Vic whispered to Sade as though she had made plans he knew nothing about.

"I don't know," Sade whispered. Aloud she said to Uncle Fletcher, "We hadn't thought of going anywhere. We—"

"Over to Ted Stembottom's house an' play cards, likely," said Uncle Fletcher. "You'll enjoy that. A good game of cards relaxes a person. Tell Ted and Bertie hello for me, Vic." He turned to Rush. "You got money to buy your ticket with, Rush?"

"I'm not going to the show, Uncle

Lead a Color-Full Life

NATURE knew her stuff when she tinted the universe, for colors affect us physically, mentally and emotionally. Fortunately for us, the world we know has been painted with hues that are in key with our emotional set-up. Our individual color choice of clothes and cosmetics, however, isn't always comparably correct.

Dr. Edward Podolsky, who just published "The Doctor Prescribes Colors," doles out color as a cure for indigestion, gouty disposition, a low-salary job, or a plain-Jane appearance. To prove his point, he explains that the correct use of color, in the right place, will do much toward simplifying your daily tasks. As an example he cites a recent experiment in the field of diversion. Billiard tables were recovered effectively in claret-colored cloth when it was discovered that the conventional green fabric presents an after-image that reduces both the enjoyment and efficiency of players. In industry, color engineers occupy as vital a place on the pay-roll as do efficiency experts. It was discovered that tools and machinery colored in visually stimulating reds and greens have a work-advantage over the drab, depressing grays and black.

A scientific basis for encouraging color in clothes is derived from the fact that our color spectrum has a distinct influence on temperatures as well. Use the right colors and chances are you'll beat the heat. The prevalence of whites, pastels, greens and yellows in the fashion mart during the warm-weather months is hardly an accident. Bright hues actually deflect the sun's rays and make you feel—as well as look—much cooler. And when it's frost-bitten time, dark shades of blue, gray, brown and black can prove your personal hot-water bottle, since they absorb the sun's heat.

There's no doubt about it—colors have invaded every field of human endeavor. They make things easier for you to see, lighten your tasks and will prove the rose-tinted spectacles for your view of life. If you're a color-clever individual, you'll make the most of the shades available on the market today. Unfortunately for us (especially when we're facing the somber days ahead), colors will be tamed for the duration. Run-riot reds, greens, purples and yellows are feeling the priority pinch, for these colors require dye products essential to our war effort. It's the reason we'll accept fashion silhouettes in less brilliant plumage this fall.

But you don't have to compromise when color-choosing your accessories or your make-up! Turn your color eye to carnival shades and perk up your war wardrobe with stimulating appointments. Cosmetic manufacturers are not feeling the color squeeze—the dyes needed for your "glow of health" are not on the priority list. The recent WPB ruling passed for the cosmetic industry did not include a curtailment of color range. Blonde, brunette, red-head or brownette, you can be sure of colors keyed to your complexion and to your hair needs.

Carry your color-consciousness to your very fingertips. Nail enamel is definitely an accessory note for your costume. Experiment with the myriad shades of red available on the market today or match-mate Chen Yu's costume colors (anything from black to canary yellow) to your bonnet and bag.

You'll find that the make-up manufacturers are eager to help you select make-up suited to your type. Woodbury, for one, has prepared color-controlled cosmetics that harmonize with the cameo-skin type, the exotic brunette, honey-skinned girl, the tropic-toned siren, or an ivory-tinted lass. And whether you're topped with a mop of red or blue-black hair, Tangee's new medium-red shade will prove the perfect complement. It's the practical answer to war-time economy. Neither a "fad" nor a "seasonal" shade—we tag it all-time and all-type.

ness, hate, and downright treachery. For the sake of the record, let it be said here that Nazi propaganda is essentially Hitler . . . the frustrated one-time Austrian bricklayer (and not paper-hanger, incidentally!) blue-printed the pattern which has become characteristic of Nazi propaganda—that incessant hammering on the same theme until the theme finds acceptance as the gospel truth . . . for example: during the pre-power, and early years of the chancellorship, practically every speech delivered by Hitler began with violent attacks on the "fourteen years of misery under the Weimar Republic" invariably leading over to the alleged blessings of National Socialism . . . there's no doubt in the opinion of objective observers that the repetition of that statement either by Hitler, or any of his henchmen, either on the air or in the press, in the Reichstag or the Sportpalast, convinced a good many intelligent Germans that it was essentially true . . . its acceptance as dogma paved the way for numerous measures toward the final liquidation of everything and anything identified with that Republic, the German State's initial attempt to make democracy a living thing.

In order to make their propaganda stick, the Nazis may present it with high-pitched emotion bordering on hysteria, or with self-righteous indignation in the face of the opponent who, however, must not be allowed to come to words . . . this is an ironclad rule laid down by Hitler himself as far back as 1931 following an incident which made a national laughing-stock of the Nazi party's program-schemer—Gottfried Feder . . . that clumsy, awkward, ignorant would-be Adam Smith had been lax enough to engage in a radio debate on economic problems with a socialist economist . . . well, you know the end of the story. Feder wound up flushed, bewildered, and confused, and the first of a good many Nazi economic experts was relegated to the scrap heap . . . then followed Hitler's edict—no more discussions!

Nazi propaganda knows no methods in the sense that it works along the lines of a preconceived plan . . . for it is just as little dogmatic as Nazism itself which was born and mushroomed, not on a program diet, but rather on promises of everything to everybody—including an "Aryan" chicken in every pot!

Its technique is as flexible as the tactics of the army on the military field, adapting itself quickly and easily to the demands of the hour . . . this was never better illustrated than in March of 1941 when the turbulent Yugoslavian nation, just piloted into the Axis camp, told Hitler to go to hell, and broke camp. Regent Prince Paul was overthrown by toughened realists who saw nothing new, much less order, in the Nazi "new order." Now—Nazi propaganda in action: twenty-four hours before that event, we, in Berlin, found ourselves flooded with a verbal and printed barrage extolling the incomparable virtues and niceties of the Yugoslavian people . . . twenty-four-hours later, that propaganda shifted its gears into reverse, and fulminated that the Serbs were nothing better than scum!—then came the bombs and bullets.

A less rapid adaptation to the requirements of the hour was the double

E. E. Johnson, Los Angeles, Calif.—The Austrian nobleman who received his first citizenship papers just over a year ago is currently one of Hollywood’s rages . . . PAUL HENREID was born in Trieste, the son of Baron Carl von Hernried. Paul started with ambitions in the publishing field, but during a performance of a school production at the Konservatorium in Vienna, he attracted the attention of Otto Preminger, who was at that time the manager of Max Reinhardt’s Vienna Theatre. Paul resigned from the publishing house for which he was working, and soon was playing leads in American shows. It was not long before Paul was one of the most popular actors in Vienna, both on the stage and the screen. But the six-foot-three-inch actor heard the call of the London stage and screen, and spent five years heading it before he came to the United States. After his London role in the film “Night Train,” Paul was signed to a long-term contract at RKO, taking him away from his CBS role as Steffan in “Joyce Jordan.” Paul is married to Elizabeth Gluck, a non-professional. He likes to ride horses, wield a tennis racket, and swim; he weighs in at about 180, has light-brown hair, blue-gray eyes. Paul is currently appearing in the film “Joan of Paris.”

SNEAKING OFF for a swim at Lake Arrowhead is Helen Wood's favorite pastime. She also haunts studios to watch dramatic programs, says it's as good as taking lessons. On "Those We Love" she's Elaine Dascom

Miss Jill Wilson, Darlington, Wis.—The Blue Network show, “In Care of Aggie Horn,” went off the air this spring. MARLOU NEUMAYER, who took the part of Gwynn Jennings, was born in Council Bluffs, Iowa, on August 26, 1920, had her first professional experience with Station KOIL in Council Bluffs. Since coming to Chicago, Marlou’s main radio roles have been Joyce in “Captain Midnight,” Gwynn of “In Care of Aggie Horn,” and speaking roles on WGN operettas.

Mary Edna Doffing, El Centro, Calif.—The great Sam Goldwyn offered a lovely fifteen-year-old girl a movie contract, but the girl’s parents persuaded her to return to her home in Tennessee to finish high school! But HELEN WOOD sent Sam Goldwyn an invitation to her graduation, and in return received a movie contract. Helen found that she had to study to forget her Southern accent, and later obtained a part in “She Married Her Boss,” which was followed by a Twentieth Century-Fox contract. Illness forced Helen to let her contract lapse, and in 1937 she appeared in a radio dramatization of “Arrowsmith” with Spencer Tracy. Since that time she has been “in.” Today, her role as Elaine Dascom in the NBC serial “Those We Love” is one of her favorites . . . Helen stands five feet six inches, has hazel eyes, brown hair, weighs 123 pounds. She was born under the sign of Gemini (June 4, 1917), says “All Gemini are crazy.”

FOOD PARCELS
SENT TO BRITISH ALLIES AND FRIENDS IN GREAT BRITAIN

WHAT'S COOKING!

By GEORGIA SCOTT

FOOD— A War Problem Child

FILLING the bread-baskets of the allied peoples of the world is one of America's greatest war industries. For armies "travel on their stomachs"—and that goes double in spades for home-fronters working on our production lines. America realized this some time back and passed the Lend-Lease Act as a vote of confidence. Its passage has meant tremendous quantities of staple foods for our Allies.

We ship milk, cheese, meats and soy beans—foods that supply body-building protein, calcium and vitamins. And canned goods have helped win the battle for food as well. Authoritative information indicates that housewives abroad prefer the American variety, and canned luncheon meats, such as Spam and Mor, have proved to be our best-sellers.

It's definitely admitted that American canned milk pulled the British through last winter when their natural milk supply was being severely rationed. Pet and Sealect milk were the popular grocery items of the day. For, according to Mr. E. M. Lloyd, chief economic advisor to the British Ministry of Food, England felt keenly the cutting of supplies from middle Europe, the Mediterranean, and subsequently Africa and the Far East.

The British people were hit at the food belt! They started the war with government-owned stocks of sugar, wheats and fats, but soon lost between seventy percent and seventy-five percent of imported supplies. This included bacon, eggs and dried and condensed milk, plus nearly half of their supply of butter. The low point for meat (increasingly significant when we read of threatened meat shortages) necessitated the surrender of the greater part of imported foodstuffs. Bombing food factories, warehouses and ports, and dislocation of transportation, brought meat, cheese and canned rations twenty-five percent below normal.

The first shipload of food sent under the Lend-Lease Act, however, effected a welcome change. Four million eggs, 120,000 pounds of cheese, and one thousand tons of flour were part of the first down-payment against the Axis. United States farmers are now supplying about a quarter of Britain's total animal protein supplies. The loss of weight and an increase in national ill health abroad are attributed to the great monotony of Ally diet and an absence of rich foods. Yet a marked improvement has taken place during the last six months—mainly due to the supply of protective foods (selected on nutritional grounds) from the United States.

But just exactly what can you, the American housewife, do to help feed our armies on the home and the allied fronts? Total war means that each one of us should individually plan menus to include the food essentials. U. S. needs US nutritionally strong, and vitamins, minerals and calories can help us achieve the ideal. It's patriotic to eat the right foods at the right time! It's our duty to be conscious of seasonal food surpluses and to market for these items whenever they are available at the lowest cost. Be sure to eat fresh foods whenever they are in season. It eliminates processing facilities and large-scale transportation. Both are needed for our friends across the seas!

In order to send food abroad we must see to it that the U. S. pantry shelves are in order. We're running the food-production lines, and it's up to us to insure its smooth transportation. A War Food Requirements Board, recently established, is busily occupied determining the quantity of food to be produced. And processing facilities—canning, freezing and de-hydration—will be speeded up for lend-lease aid. Consult your grocer and your Government for food information. And don't hoard! It's the surest road to inflation. We're going to win this war with the help of canteen kits, the dinner-pail, your pantry and you!

air force had been wiped out of the skies, Russia's military back broken. But the Russians continued to fight, their dictionary apparently didn't contain the word "surrender," and the rising stench of Nazi dead on the Eastern front pervaded the homeland. Then, indicative of the efficiency dip, was the joke which ran something like this throughout the Reich: "You see, we've already licked the Russians, but they can't read our newspapers, so they don't know it yet!"

volte face with respect to the Soviets. Nazi home propaganda seeks not only to convince, but also to comfort its "beneficiaries." This it does through the three established mediums of the radio, press and impressive mass meetings. Hitler, as a matter of fact, has even borrowed, and cleverly interwoven into the pattern of Nazi propaganda, the grandeur and sweeping solemnity of Roman Catholic Church ritual. Nazi bomepropaganda, to achieve its ends, resorts to a technique which can only be defined with illustrations. A favorite method is diversion. For example: "Strength through Joy" (Kraft durch Freude) sea cruises were sold to the workers, but the workers first contributed the money that built the vessels. Here, the Nazis, under the guise of what they called practical socialism, started to build up a small transport fleet. This is a classic example of the diversion method.

The latest creation of Nazi propaganda technique—and an extremely effective one—has been performed at home, and not abroad. Unity has been created among the German masses—unity based on the fear of this war's aftermath. The Goebbel's Propaganda Ministry has placed the specter of revenge by the subjugated people before the eyes of the German people—and that specter has achieved its purpose.

When Nazi military power was finally cemented, arousing fear of Germany's might became a favorite weapon in the arsenal of Nazi propaganda. Its results?—witness the bloodless conquests of Austria and Czechoslovakia. And months before the first Nazi shells were lobbed into Poland, Nazi propaganda took up its battle station . . . as Hitler himself had once said to Herman Rauschning, former President of the Danzig Senate: "In the future war, propaganda must replace the artillery barrage preceding an assault; before we advance, propaganda must first paralyze the enemy and render him powerless as much as possible."

Nazi propaganda directed toward this country seeks not to convince, much less convert a broad mass, but rather seeks to strengthen the beliefs of dissenters, support potential traitors with "useful" arguments and slogans; and from an over-all point of view, strives to create confusion. Radio is the favorite medium of Nazi propaganda. That this is so is supported, if by nothing else, by Hitler's statement in the preface to the official German handbook on radio: "Without the automobile, without the aeroplane, but more important without the radio, never could we National Socialists have won over the German people."

THE blitz victory over Poland was exploited to the full by Goebbel's ministry; its two-edged sword was directed against both Germany's enemies and the still undecided neutrals. The Nazi documentary film of the Polish war, "Baptism of Fire," sent into every country, is a classic piece of the propaganda aimed to create fright.

The Nazi respect of the power of radio is best manifested by the little placard which is placed just above the tuning dial of every radio set in Germany reading, in essence: "Germans—listen to German radio stations and keep your head."

Nazi reports on the various military campaigns are drenched in superlatives of efficiency, horror and destruction designed to impress the world (!) with Nazi invincibility and irresistibility . . . "Rolling attacks of the Luftwaffe have dealt paralyzing blows to the beaten and pursued enemy . . . the fast-moving infantry and panzer units are annihilating the encircled enemy divisions . . . and the rings are being inexorably tightened."

The dispensers of Nazi propaganda even sought, as you might expect, to influence America's foreign correspondents in a number of ways which they thought were smooth and subtle. Illustrations: Foreign correspondents were given twice the average German's bread, butter and meat rations. We could import certain foodstuffs, such as butter, eggs, bacon and that precious medium of exchange in the German black market—coffee, real coffee!

Another means of strategical propaganda, and one favored by von Ribbentrop, Hitler's conceited Foreign Minister, is the sowing and nurturing of disunity within the enemy . . . one class incited against the other . . . workers lured with pseudo-socialist phrases and attacks on capitalism . . . capitalists, intimidated by the "Communist danger," conveniently reminded that Nazi Germany represents the only bulwark against the Bolshevik flood threatening to overwhelm Europe . . . and all classes incited against their government with a persistent emphasis that the war is none of that government's business.

There were the lunches and dinners given privately, or generally, for foreign correspondents in either the Goebbel's or von Ribbentrop "press" clubs or the more exclusive restaurants. At these particular "meetings" the Nazi officials would leave nothing untried in their untiring efforts to win, if nothing else, our sympathies . . . and last, but not least, there was the appeal to baser instincts to achieve this end—"chickens without feathers," we were slyly told, could be had at two "houses" maintained by the two Ministries!

Nazi propaganda is by no means impeccable, much less infallible. Its efficiency has been considerably blunted by the frequent and sudden 180 degree reverses of Nazi policy. Witness: Soviet Russia.

Nazi propaganda, in the main, is double-barreled in that if one spread of fire doesn't splinter the opposition, the other will; if the first barrel scores, the second peppering will smash any resistance left. It allows for misses in firing many shots; and thus through a hit-and-miss method, if that be method, Nazi propaganda snakes its devious course.

Nazi propaganda dipped to its lowest point of efficiency in November of 1941 after the German people had been told at least five times that the Russian Fletcher," Rush said chuckling. "When's it start?" asked Uncle Fletcher.

"Well, the second show's about ready to go off," Rush replied, "but—"

"Boys get in for fifteen cents?" "Yes," said Rush.

Uncle Fletcher stood up and dug deep into a pocket. "I believe I happen to have fifteen cents in change," he said. "Let me see."

"How about it?" Rush asked Vic and Sade in low tones. Before they could answer, Uncle Fletcher was off again.

"If the telephone rings, Sadie," he said, "I'll talk to the party an' take the message. If anybody knocks at the door I'll find out what they want. Here, Rush, two nickels an' five pennies."

Rush hesitated. "It hasn't been definitely decided yet that—"

"Forget it," said Uncle Fletcher smiling. "That's what money's for. To spend. You go to the show. Yell an' whistle at the exciting parts. That's the way to enjoy the theater. When the hero pulls off some big stunt, yell an' whistle." He turned to Vic and Sade. "What time ya due at Ted and Gertie's, Sadie?"

"It's Fred and Ruthie's, Uncle Fletcher, and we haven't exactly planned on—"

"Fine. Tell 'em hello for me, Sadie. An' don't worry about a thing. I'll take off my shoes an' read the paper a while an' probably along about ten o'clock or so I'll go upstairs an' hit the hay." "Um," said Vic, eying the davenport enviously. He'd planned on using it for exactly the same purpose Uncle Fletcher now proposed. But Sade whispered to him, "I s'pose we could go."

"What?" asked Vic, surprised and rather amused. The idea of Uncle Fletcher clearing the house appealed to Vic's sense of humor.

"I bet Fred an' Ruthie would like to play," Sade encouraged.

"You mean," Vic said, "that you'd let yourself be thrown out of your own home?"

"No, of course not," Sade replied giggling. "But this afternoon I had it in the back of my head maybe we could get up a game of five hundred tonight an'—"

Uncle Fletcher pushed his satchel forward with one foot.

"Examine my hand-satchel before ya leave for the show, Rush?"

"Ah," said Rush, "you already named over what's inside."

"Little boys like to examine hand-satchels," said Uncle Fletcher, who always treated Rush as though he were about six or seven instead of fourteen. "I did myself," he added.

"Of course, there's not much to speak of inside—night-shirt, socks, underwear, patent-leather necktie, handkerchief or two—"

"Un-huh," Rush said without interest.

Sade was laughing to herself again as she spoke to Vic in low tones. "Why don't I phone 'em?"

"We're being ousted. Tossed out in the street," said Vic. Uncle Fletcher continued to talk to Rush. "Also," he said, "got a wash-rag an' a clock in my hand-satchel. Go ahead an' examine it."

"Ah, Gov," Rush said, addressing Vic, "can I go to the Bijou?"

"What's Mama say?" "I don't care," Sade said with a little laugh. "Ah—er—Uncle Fletcher, I'm gonna use the telephone."

"Yes," Uncle Fletcher said. "You do that."

"We are being herded like sheep," said Vic.

"That's okay with me," Rush commented.

"Suppose somebody suggested we go jump in the lake, Doctor Sleetch?" Vic asked Sade, who had picked up the telephone. "I'm kinda tired this evening. I'd like to stretch out on the davenport with a newspaper."

"But," said Sade, "Uncle Fletcher's gonna stretch out on the davenport with the newspaper."

"So I see," said Vic, scratching his ear. Sade called, meanwhile, and reached the Stembottoms. The conversation was brief and as she hung up, Sade turned to Vic and said, "They'll be delighted to have us."

"Hey, hey," said Vic. "Talkin' to Gertie Stembottom, huh, Sadie?" asked Uncle Fletcher.

"It's Ruthie Stembottom, Uncle Fletcher."

"Yes. Fine woman, Gertie is. Makes a good friend for ya."

Sade bustled around, found her hat and turned to Vic. "Well—everybody ready to leave? Get your hat an' coat, Vic." "I just now took 'em off," Vic said sourly.

"Put 'em back on again."

"Now," said Uncle Fletcher, "I want you to go right on ahead with your plans exactly as if I wasn't here."

"Okay," Vic said without enthusiasm. "I'm not company here," Uncle Fletcher said. "Don't pay any attention to me . . . Well, good-by, folks."

The front door closed behind the Gook family and Uncle Fletcher was left in charge.

"Well," he said with satisfaction, "believe I'll take my shoes off now an' stretch out on the davenport with the newspaper."
